Paul Lawrence Madison Jr., a jazz tenor saxophonist who played with such greats as Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie, died Jan. 22, 1995 at his Wahiawa home. He was 64. Madison was born Nov. 11, 1930 in Hutchinson, KA. His father was a musician and he received his first saxophone – a toy one – at age 3. Two years later he got a real one. By the time he was 15, Madison was heading up his own band. Among his musical associates were some of the greatest names in jazz. They included bassist Charles Mingus, Nat King Cole, guitarist Joe Comfort and pianist Art Tatum. “And of course Charlie Parker was his mentor,” said Madison’s wife, Classie. “He sort of sat at his knee and learned from him.” “From Gillespie, she said, Madison learned more than just blow.” He had a feel for quality and that’s what he tried to do in his music. Madison came to Hawaii in 1963 with a band, Classie said, and “stayed because he met me.” She was living in Haleiwa she said and was introduced to Madison by a close friend. They married on Jan. 19, 1965 and celebrated their 30th wedding anniversary a few days before Madison’s death. In Hawaii, Madison started a roofing business, but he continued playing as often as possible. He played with the Doug McDonald Trio at the Ilikai Hotel and various other hotels, clubs and restaurants, including the Sheraton Waikiki’s Hanohano room. He once recorded a cassette with McDonald. He also often played with the late Trummy Young, a trombonist who played with Louis Armstrong before moving to Hawaii. Madison also gigged aboard the cruise ships Independence and Constitution. His last employer was Paradise Cruise; he played aboard the dinner cruise ship Star of Honolulu. Madison was a member of the Jehovah’s Witnesses and also a former member of the Musician’s Association of Hawaii, Local 677, A.F. and M. He is survived by

In 1959, the couple and two daughters boarded the Orient and Pacific Lines ship Orcades in Naples, for an extended visit in Hawaii. They arrived in November of that year. In 1961, Marignoli, an abstract painter, exhibited some of his works at the Hawaiian Village Hotel. “Hawaii is good for holidays, but not so good for a painter,” he said in an interview. “It’s too quiet, like the hula. Life for a painter must be a little more hard- how do you say it? – more angry.” His work was shown in major art galleries of Europe. He worked with the Galerie Denise Rene and the Galerie Jacques Massol, both of Paris, the Galerie L’Attico and the Studio Esse of Rome. Showing in both one man and group shows. He exhibited in and was collected by museums in Germany, Switzerland and Italy and participated in international fairs in Paris, Madrid and Basle, Switzerland. He has shown in various other galleries in France, Italy and America. Marignoli and family left in September of that year. Katsuro Miho, 82, of Honolulu, died Jan. 18, 1995. He was born in Wailuku, was a retired attorney who worked hard to get Asian-Americans accepted as equals and to win statehood for Hawaii, past president of the Japanese Chamber of Commerce and the Urasenke Tea Society, and former vice-chairman of the Statehood Commission. Miho was born in Wailuku, Maui. In 1928 when Hawaii was still a U.S. Territory and Miho was 15, he won an inter-island model airplane building contest with his entry: a 40-inch monoplane powered by a rubber-band motor that flew for 40 minutes. Miho's prize was a trip to Detroit where he was to participate in the national airplane model building contest. But he and his parents learned that they would have to shut down their Kahului general store and hotel for a day to prove to immigration officials in Honolulu that Miho was an American citizen. And they learned it wasn't enough to present a birth certificate. Because they were Japanese-Americans, they had to produce childhood photographs, old school records, passports and proof that Miho was born in Hawaii. The requirements were mandated by the 1924 Oriental Exclusion Act, intended to keep Asians out of America. Miho passed the muster, and the teen went to Detroit. He returned to continue his studies at Maui High School where he was a member of the championship debating team. After graduating from high school, Miho attended the University of Utah in Salt Lake City, then studied law at George Washington University's law school in Washington, D.C. During his college years Miho earned most of his tuition and living expenses by working as a typewriter repairman. "I became quite a character in Washington", he once recalled. "My boss used to advertise me as the only Japanese repairman in America." In 1938, Miho returned to Hawaii with a law degree. In 1940, as tensions between the United States and the Empire of Japan threatened to erupt into war – as they did a year later, when Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor – Miho gave a speech to a club of Japanese-American alumni of the University of Hawaii. "It is unfortunate, yet natural, that Americans of Japanese ancestry are in some measure, the scapegoats in the present crisis," he said. "However, this situation must not blind us from seeing the true light of Americanism." The day Japan bombed Pearl Harbor, Miho's father, Katsuichi, was forced at bayonet point from his Kahului home. Still a Japanese citizen (U.S. law barred the naturalization of Asians), he spent the rest of the war in internment camps on the mainland. Three of his four Hawaii born sons, including Katsuro Miho, promptly volunteered for military service. Two served with the famed 442 Regimental Combat Team (one of them died in a highway accident during training exercises at Camp Shelby, Miss.) Miho however, failed the U.S. Army's physical. He spent the war years performing community service and worked with his law partner, later to become U.S. Sen. Hiram Fong, to repeal immigration laws designed to exclude Asians. Miho was a partner in Fong Miho Choy & Robinson. In 1985, Miho's efforts were recognized when the government of Japan awarded him the Third-Class Order of the Sacred Treasurer during ceremonies commemorating the 100th anniversary of the first Japanese immigrants to Hawaii. Miho worked tirelessly to get Hawaii admitted as a state, serving as Vice Chairman of the Hawaii

Statehood Commission. He was also former president of the Japanese Chamber of Commerce and Friends of the East-West Center. Survived by wife, Jayne F.; sons, Jon T. and David R.; three grandchildren; brother, Katsugo; and sisters, Tsukie Fujimori and Fumie Miho. [Adv Jan. 23, 1995]
