David, Matthews, Eighty-one-year-old David Matthews lost a decades-long fight against lung disease Saturday but won many other battles in his decades-long fight to protect Oahu's coastlines. Yesterday, his friends and family gathered at Sandy Beach, an area protected from development after Matthews and his Save Sandy Beach Coalition called for a landmark voter referendum to keep it as it is now. He was described as fierce and feisty yet kind and joyful. He wore many hats, including co-owner of a steel business in Ohio, environmental activist, outspoken left-wing figure in the Democratic Party and political button collector. "David was a warrior with a big heart," said Phil Estermann, who co-founded the Sandy Beach coalition with Matthews in the 1980s. "Even though he'd argue with you and get riled up at times, at the end he'd give you a big hug. He was a very loving guy." The pair met at a 1985 Hawaii Kai Neighborhood Board meeting that discussed a proposed 172-townhome development by landowner Kamehameha Schools. Matthews' passionate protest against the development drew Estermann to him, and the two formed the landmark activist group. Reminders of its work remain in the "Save Sandy Beach" bumper stickers still clinging to older vehicles, and many shirts still being worn, including at yesterday's service. The movement ended with the city rezoning and buying the land in question to ensure it remains undeveloped and open to the public. "This is the last undeveloped scenic shoreline accessible to the general public," Estermann said. "It's a unique resource and David recognized that." Matthews was involved in environmental activism as recently as last summer, when he helped block development on the Ka Iwi Coast. From a wheelchair, Matthews spoke at a rally in the city in August. Rep. Gene Ward (R, Hawaii Kai) presented a state commendation to his family for his activism. Matthews loved politics until the end, his family said. His son, 59-year-old Daryl, said one of his last conversations with his father was about politics. "He asked me, 'So do you think (Barack) Obama is just a flash in the pan?'" Daryl said, holding a bag of political buttons his father had collected over the years. Richard Port, national committeeman for the state Democratic Party, said Matthews' roots as a labor union worker fueled his passion for workers' rights and equality. "He was what all of us aspire to be, in terms of citizen activism," Port said. "All of this he did without pay. No words that I can express add anything to the fundamental accomplishments David made in our community." Ann Marie Kirk, a 43-year-old member of the Ka Iwi Coalition, said Matthews' work would continue to influence Hawaii activists in the future. "What more inspiration do you need than that?" Kirk said. "He's a giant." Liz Matthews called her late husband of 36 years the most honest man she had ever met, with a "handshake you can take to the bank." Although his condition left Matthews unable to speak recently, his wife remembered that his last words were to his grandsons. "He told them to learn, because knowledge is what's most important; to travel, because you learn when you travel," she said. "To love, because it's the best thing you'll ever learn; and to take a great big bite out of life. And that was what he did." Canadian-born Matthews lived in Ohio until he decided to retire in Hawaii in 1984. He is survived by wife Liz, son Daryl and grandsons Max and Jacob. (Honolulu Star Bulletin 5 January 2007)

Demarest, Jim who played Mr. Checkers on the popular local children's show "Checkers & Pogo," died Tuesday at the St. James Hospice in Chicago. He was 80. Demarest was ill for the past six months and his condition worsened, said his oldest son, Barry Smith. Born James Hugh Demarest-Smith of Bedford Park, Ill., Demarest played the character of Mr. Checkers from 1968 to 1979, the third and the longest actor in the role on the KGMB program. Phil Arnone, KGMB program director from 1966 to 1989, said station owner Cec Heftel saw Demarest perform in a musical and offered him an audition. "He was a nice guy, very talented, great voice," Arnone said. During the 1960s, Demarest legally changed his last name because there was already an actor named James Smith, Demarest's son said. The first to play Mr. Checkers was Jim "Weather Eyes" Hawthorne, who created the character with his signature "Go-Go" glasses, said Lawrence Pacheco, who produced a documentary, "Checkers & Pogo Remembered," that aired on KGMB in March 1999. After three months, the role was taken over by Dave Donnelly, a Star-Bulletin columnist who died in January 2004. He performed for about a year until Demarest stepped in. Demarest played an authoritative father figure as Mr. Checkers while Morgan White played his carefree, child-like pal, Pogo Poge. White said he enjoyed working with Demarest, who had a likable, easygoing personality. "He was the type of guy who would put up a Christmas tree in October and not take it down until March," said White, 83, who lives in Utah. On their downtime from the show, Demarest and White and their wives would often go to theaters and restaurants together. After Demarest left the show, White carried on the show solo until it ended in 1982. When the show debuted in May 1967, it generated considerable excitement, with a daily live audience of children. At the time Heftel purchased KGMB, many stations were doing live television, Arnone said. Along with his character's signature look of checkered eyeglasses, Demarest wore a black top hat with a checkered band. Out in the community, Demarest maintained the checkered look. "Something was checkered on him all the time, no matter whether he was in costume or not," Demarest's son said. He had checkered ties, socks, glasses, changeable checkered bands for his top hat and a couple of checkered cars, he added. Demarest also had some roles in "Hawaii Five-0" and was a member of the Honolulu Elks Lodge. His ashes will be sent to the Elks Lodge and scattered in the ocean, the same place where the ashes of his late wife, Jeri Demarest, were scattered in the early 1980s. "He loved Hawaii and that's where he wanted to be," Smith said. Demarest is also survived by son James Ryerson Smith and daughter Weslee Smith. [Honolulu Star Bulletin 14 June 2007]

Diamond, Stewart, Jan. 19, 2007 For years, island radio listeners heard L. Stewart Diamond deliver the news authoritatively in deep voice with a slight Southern accent when they tuned in to the talk shows of the late Hal "Aku" Lewis and his successors Michael W. Perry and Larry Price. Diamond started as a radio news broadcaster in the 1960s, working for KKUA-AM and KGMB-AM, now KSSK-AM. In the 1980s he was station manager of KULA-FM, now KSSK-FM. Diamond, 68, died Friday in Mililani. Radio was just one of three careers for Diamond, who was an Army public affairs officer for the past 23 years, served as chief of public affairs for the U.S. Army Installation Management Command at Fort Shafter and retired in 1980 as a senior master sergeant after nearly 23 years in the Air Force. "He was pretty much a serious guy," said KSSK-FM broadcaster Dick Wainright. "He did a great job, speaking in this booming voice. He was a father figure" to many others in local radio, Wainright said. "He was the original manager of KSSK-FM when it first started in a little back room at a time when AM radio was the big stuff." Sharon Pascual said her father "was very modest about things he had done. He didn't like to talk about himself. We knew he had won medals and that he was asked to go into the studio to record. Other people would come and tell us." Pascual said the performance Diamond was most proud of was his role as master of ceremonies for a dramatization commemorating Armed Forces history presented at Hickam Air Force Base in 1991 and 1992. "One of our fondest memories is when he would walk into a room and say something in that booming voice, people would stop and look at him," said Pascual. He was born in Greenville, Ala. His military honors included a Bronze Star, two Meritorious Service medals and a Vietnam Service Medal. He was recognized by the U.S. Department of Defense with Thomas Jefferson awards for broadcasting. A funeral service will be held at 7 p.m. Thursday at Cornerstone Fellowship, 95-1080 Ukuwai St., Mililani. Friends may call after 6 p.m. Burial with military honors will be at 1 p.m. Friday at Hawaii State Veterans Cemetery in Kaneohe. He is survived by his wife Kimiko; daughters Shana, Sheryl and Sharon; sister Cile; and six grandchildren. (Honolulu Star Bulletin 23 January 2007)
