Chock, Helen (1917-2007) Helen Chock, who founded Helena's in 1946, died Friday, less than a month before her 90th birthday. The James Beard Award-winning restaurant will remain closed now until July 21. Chock's daughter, Helen Katsuyoshi, said Chock was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer three weeks ago. She said she wouldn't put it past her mother to have planned her passing for a time when the restaurant would be closed anyway. "My mother was very pragmatic." When Helen Chock died on Friday, her family briefly considered closing its Kalihi restaurant, Helena's Hawaiian Foods. Briefly. But there were orders to fill, Chock's daughter, Elaine Katsuyoshi, said. "If we closed, she would turn over in her grave." Chock died of pancreatic cancer, less than a month shy of her 90th birthday. For more than 60 years she had worked tirelessly at Helena's, the restaurant she opened on North King street in 1946. Chock chopped, sliced, grilled, stewed and fried her beloved plates of traditional foods, becoming especially known for her pipikaula-style short ribs and butterfish collars. Katsuyoshi said her mother was working 12 hours a day until recently, when she asked Katsuyoshi to spell her for a few hours in the afternoon, "so she could take naps between the lunch and dinner hour." She finally had to give it up on May 18, too tired to keep up the pace. On June 8 came the diagnosis of cancer, Katsuyoshi said. In a Star-Bulletin interview in 1996, Chock said she was doing what she felt she was meant to do. "I don't feel stress. For 50 years I been doing this, and if you love your work, why you going be stressed out? It's about what you love. This is what I wanted." The original Helena's was a casual place of Formica tabletops and wooden stools, but became a favorite of local celebrities and was well-regarded in the national restaurant guide Zagat's. It was Chock's husband, Jong Chock, who said she should call the restaurant Helena's -- because it sounded more Hawaiian than "Helen." In 2001, the restaurant moved to School Street and Chock's grandson, Craig Katsuyoshi, took over the kitchen, although Chock stayed on as cashier. Just a year earlier, Chock had made a rare trip out of state, to New York, where she collected one of the megaprizes in the restaurant world, a James Beard Foundation Award. Helena's was named a Regional Classic, a special designation for locally owned, neighborhood eateries that best reflect the character of their communities. Although she said she made a lot of new friends at the awards ceremony - and invited them all to visit Helena's -- Chock was unimpressed with the city and was eager to get back home and fill her Mother's Day orders. After her mother's cancer was found, Katsuyoshi said, the family decided against surgery, although Chock underwent radiation treatment just to contain the cancer and prevent pain. "She said she didn't want to go to any nursing home, she didn't want to have pain, she just wanted to not wake up one day." And that's how it happened, Katsuyoshi said. "She was not afraid at all and from that I take comfort." Services are tentatively scheduled for July 21, but details are pending. Helena's is closed now, by the way, until July 17. But since they did fill all of Chock's pending orders, Katsuyoshi said, "I'm sure she's resting in peace." [Honolulu Star Bulletin 4 July 2007]

Tom and Pamela Chun-Ganske; brother, Frederic; sister, Victoria Fong; seven grandchildren; two great-grandchildren. Private services. Arrangements by Nuuanu Memorial Park & Mortuary. [Honolulu Advertiser 17 July 2007]

Chun, Paul Kwai Tung (1922-2007) Paul Kwai Tung "KT" Chun, the son of a cobbler who rose to head a widely known shoe and clothing business, never let his success go to his head. "My dad was unpretentious," said daughter Pamela Chun-Ganske, who became a clothing buyer for the family company. "He would always say he didn't have money. We all started working when we were about 8 or 9 years old, and we all started from the bottom." Chun, president and chief executive officer of Chun Kim Chow Ltd., which also had real estate holdings including the Waikiki Circle Hotel, died at home June 21 at age 84. From his father's Chinatown shop -- Chun Kim Chow Shoe Store, begun in 1908 -- the family expanded the business to nearly 80 outlets across the state and $60 million annually in gross receipts at its peak, with Paul Chun at the helm of the retail end of the business. Up to 2001, Chun Kim Chow Ltd. was the state's largest independent shoe retailer. But with all his success, Chun remained humble. "If I had a million dollars, I'd retire today." He always said that, said Chun-Ganske. "Even when he had it, we didn't know he had it." So the family worked harder, believing that they were poor. He wanted to teach his children the value of hard work and money, and the importance of "earning your own way because it made you a better person," she said. In retail and in death, his family believed his timing was impeccable. Chun-Ganske said her father was having a hard time sleeping the night of his death, so she suggested he meditate and recite the word om, a sacred word. He died an hour later. "I guess he must have known it was the time to cross over," and om was the last word he spoke, said daughter Paula Chun-Vetter. "Dad did have a sense of timing," she said with a laugh. His development of different concepts for his stores came at the right time, too, she said. Renton Nip, Chun's nephew and the company president, agreed, saying his uncle began opening Robins in the late 1950s when shopping centers started developing in Honolulu. The first Robins opened at the newly developed Ala Moana Center and became the company's most familiar outlet. "He recognized that the local merchants had to move into the shopping centers," he said. "At one time, Pearlridge Shopping Center probably had at least 10 different concepts owned by the company," and Ala Moana Center had at least six at one time. They include the early stores Smart Shoe Shop, Leaders and Red Coach, later expanding to Wildflowers, Nicole, Body Shop, Gem's shoe and other concessions, and even the Gloria Jean's coffee franchise, predating Starbucks. Chun-Vetter said, "My dad taught about gut feeling, you follow your intuition." As a shoe buyer, he noticed what women wore so he knew what to buy, she added. Son Rodney, who now runs Robins, recalled his dad starting his day at 6 a.m. at Waikiki Circle Hotel's restaurant to cook breakfast when the chef was out, going to his office to do paperwork, doing the buying and helping at the warehouse if someone was sick. With little time for hobbies, he was able to pursue his passions for cooking and retail on the job, his family said. A pancake recipe he developed from scratch turned the hotel restaurant around and drew long lines of customers. Born in Honolulu, Chun graduated from Saint Louis School.
