Windsor G. Hackler, a longtime diplomat and academic, died Wednesday June 26, 1996 on his 80th birthday at his Kahala home. He was director of the Overseas Career Program at the University of Hawaii, following his retirement from the State Department. Later, he became curator of Gannett Fellowships at UH. He set much store in adequate preparation for Americans going to Asia. He recalled finding himself suddenly in Shanghai totally unprepared for the experience. But he learned fast and eventually became an authority on Asian art, especially Japanese prints. He described the UH Overseas Career Program as a prescribed course of studies for American graduate students specifically designed to help them prepare themselves to live and work in Asia. "The academic work of the program is greatly enhanced by the participation in seminar discussion of members of the Honolulu community who themselves are experts in various Asian-related endeavors and bring to the discussions their practical experiences," he said. "Another part of the program is the internship, which gives the student practical experience for several months in an Asian country." A native of Gregory, S.D., Hackler taught at the University of Arkansas after graduate study at Northwestern and Harvard universities. He then served five years as a Navy officer in World War II, making 32 Atlantic convoy crossings, ending up as assistant naval attache in Nanking, China. Following the war, he eventually became a Foreign Service officer, remaining with the State Department until 1965. He served in Saudi Arabia, Japan, Indonesia, Singapore, Canada and Washington, D.C., as a special assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State. In later years, he was president of the Oriental Arts Society and a director of the Hawaii Opera Theater. "A gentleman, who loved the arts and loved to teach," is the way son Jeffrey described him. "He enjoyed being with people. He enjoyed doing things to the best of his ability. He relished life and he lived it with style and class. While teaching Asian studies at UH, he would serve tea during breaks, bridging the gap between teacher and students, helping students grow, Jeffrey

Hackler said. "He wanted to make each person be the best he could possibly be." Hackler also is survived by wife Rhoda E.A.; and two grandchildren. Memorial services will be held 4 p.m. Wednesday at Holy Nativity Church, 5286 Kalaniana'ole Highway. Private inurnment later in the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific. Donations may be made to the Hawaii Opera Theatre. [SB 29/06/1996]

Kavin Tetsuo Higa, whose diverse talents made him a sought-after actor, singer and dancer in scores of Honolulu productions, died April 23, 1996. He was 42. Remembered by many as a talented entertainer, Higa touched a lot of people in his different incarnations, said Mary Marko, production stage manager at Diamond Head Theatre. Whether it was performing the hula with Halau Hula O' Maiki and Halau Ke Kia'i a o Hula, singing bass with various choirs and ensembles, dancing country western with Blazin' Saddles or acting on the stage, "he did all of them well," Marko said. Born in Hilo, Higa showed early promise as an entertainer. "Kavin had perfect pitch," recalled sister Lynne Tanno. "And he taught himself how to play guitar and piano." Higa began performing with a group called "Sing Out Hilo" in the late 1960s. He joined a roadshow called "Impossible Years" in 1970 and continued his stage career as a student at the University of Hawaii at Hilo. He was also a member of The Lutheran Church of Honolulu Choir, St. Mark's Sings, Hawaii Vocal Arts Ensemble, The Honolulu Madrigal Quartet, Operettists and Two-Step Hawaii, and performed in productions at the Diamond Head Theatre, Army Community Theatre, Manoa Valley Theatre and Mamiya Theatre. His portrayal of the king in the 1993 Army Community Theatre production of "The King and I" earned Higa a Pookela Award. He often played the villain because of his low voice, Higa noted in a 1984 interview. Higa was also well-known for his "opening night antics," Marko said. After the performance, he'd dress up like Carmen Miranda and pass out opening night presents. Those who didn't know were surprised. Those of us who did, looked forward to it." "He was a really giving person," Tanno said. "He was always willing to go out of his way to help someone." He is survived by his mother, Sadako Higa; brothers Glenn, Clyde, Eric and Myron; sisters, Debra and Lynne; hanai sisters, Nani Naope and Kapiolani Hao; and nieces and nephews. A life celebration is set for 2 to 6 p.m. April 27 at Church of the Crossroads, 1212 University Ave. [SB 26/04/1996]

Don Horio, best known as Gov. John Burns' press secretary and a longtime Democratic Party workhorse, launched his political and government career from the Star-Bulletin. Horio had begun his newspaper career as a general assignment reporter in 1956. Not long after the 1962 election, Burns named the then-34-year-old newsman as his press aide, and in succeeding years Horio stood by Burns through good and bad times. Horio, 68, who died a week ago today in Maui Memorial Hospital, was born at Makawao. He attended Maui schools and the University of Hawaii, majoring in English. He covered business, labor and politics for the Star-Bulletin, heading its legislative bureau for three sessions. He edited a small magazine before joining the newspaper. Since Burns, re-elected in 1966 and 1970, often preferred long intervals between news conferences, it was Horio's task to smooth this over with reporters. But critical press comments about this and other matters at times drew Horio fire. For example, in one of his angrier moods in 1973, he said: "If nothing else, the incredible running account of Watergate may serve to restore a measure of public confidence in the press. Let us hope so, because the press could stand a good shot of restorative juice today." He blasted local reporters for perpetuating what he called political myths. He particularly didn't like what he saw as a recurring theme that Gov. Burns was in a running feud with Honolulu Mayor Frank Fasi. Horio's years as press secretary were followed by work for the state Senate in the mid-70s, and he was spokesman for the state Health Department into the late 1980s. Through it all, including health controversies over pesticides, Horio usually presented a calm demeanor, maybe even an icy composure, his outspoken times actually rare. Doug Boswell, longtime political writer, viewed Horio as a man of substance. "About all I can say is he was a great newsman and was present in either the newspaper or the state government during a critical period in Hawaii's development." This evaluation drew agreement from Tom Coffman -- former political writer and author of "Catch a Wave," a definitive volume on Burns' political career. "Don was a warrior. He was very close to Gov. Burns. He had a deep, keen feeling for the history of the Democratic Party in Hawaii." Coffman recalled while in the early stages of writing "Catch a Wave," Horio insisted he do his homework and become a genuine authority on Burns and the party -- and that this interaction helped. Once Horio was convinced Coffman was genuine, he arranged a Coffman interview with Burns that lasted 5 1/2 hours. "When I was with the Star-Bulletin as a political reporter, I frequently wrote stories highly critical of the late governor. I knew that Don disapproved of what I wrote. However, he would always talk to me and try to tell me what I did wrong. Sometimes he was right," said Buck Donham, another journalist. Horio is survived by mother, Haly Yoshie Horio; wife Lila A.; sons Blake and Glenn, and sister Pearl N. Nishino. Services were private. [SB 28 /06/1996]
