Kakesako, Tommy (1921-2007) Tommy Kakesako would have made a great politician, said his sister, Joyce Inao. "He knew how to persuade people," she said. Those powers helped him raise money and enlist volunteers to achieve his dream, a "living" war memorial at Keehi Lagoon. From swampland arose the Keehi Lagoon Memorial Complex. Kakesako, 85, co-founder of Kakesako Brothers Jewelers, died Friday at Tripler Army Medical Center. A veteran of the famed 442nd Regimental Combat Team, Company L, during World War II, Kakesako was close to many politicians and prominent residents who served with him. "I'm going to miss him," said U.S. Sen. Daniel Inouye. "We served together in the war and also after the war. He was the guiding light and the spark plug for the Disabled American Veterans, and the Keehi Lagoon development has his fingerprints. All the buildings can be traced to his efforts." The Tommy Kakesako Rehab Building was named to recognize his dedication and work that began in 1959 with a desire for a DAV clubhouse. Groundbreaking was held in May for the Keehi Adult Day Health Center and Childcare Center, which will house rehab services, to honor Kakesako as chairman of the nonprofit Keehi Memorial Organization. Inouye was instrumental in moving up the event so Kakesako, who was ill, could attend, Inao said. Today the popular complex has fishponds, gardens, a gazebo, meeting facilities and recreation on an 11-acre site. "It's just beautiful," says attorney Jeffrey Ono, whose father, Tokuji Ono, a member of the 100th Battalion, ranked Kakesako among his good friends. The two WWII veterans were founding members of the Disabled American Veterans Department of Hawaii. Kakesako was born in Papaikou, a sugar village on the Hamakua Coast. One of five sons in the family, he went to Hilo High School, then to the Elgin Watch College in Elgin, Ill., and to the Institute of Gemology. He then worked with his brother Kenneth at a jewelry store. When war broke out, he served in Europe and was seriously wounded trying to rescue a Texas "Lost

Battalion," the late A.A. (Bud) Smyser of the Star-Bulletin recounted in a 1994 column about the Keehi Lagoon Memorial Project. His war injuries were not visible, but his abdominal area "was ripped apart," Inouye said. "He was never complaining. He was always mission-oriented." Kakesako was sent to a hospital in England, and when the war ended, he rejoined Kenneth, who had opened a jewelry store, Inao said. They incorporated in 1950 and started Kakesako Brothers Jewelers, still at the same location at 923 Alakea St. "You can trace just about all of Maggie's (Inouye's wife) jewelry to Kakesako Brothers," Inouye said. "I hope they keep that old name, because that's how we know it." It was one of the first jewelry stores in Hawaii to permit time payments, Inouye said. "That's why you would see gals wearing big rocks and wonder where in the world they got them. Tommy was trusting in that sense." Michael Kakesako, last of the five brothers, said Tommy was "a survivor," living 1 1/2 years after he was told in February 2006 he had only six months to live with pancreatic cancer. "He was an awfully nice guy," recalled James Burns, retired chief judge of the Intermediate Court of Appeals. "He was a great supporter of my father," the late Gov. John A. Burns. Burns said he can still picture Kakesako as he "sat at his chair there, repairing watches or doing jewelry," adding, "He was very good at what he did. ... He enjoyed life. He enjoyed his business." Kakesako's brother and sister are his only immediate survivors. Military services will be held at 4 p.m. Aug. 19 at Hosoi Mortuary. Visitation will start at 3 p.m. Ashes will be placed in a niche at the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific, Punchbowl, after the services. The family requests no flowers. KELLEY, CAPT. LAWRENCE (1922-2007) Capt. Lawrence W. Kelley retired in Hawaii after a 30-year career in the Navy, but he did not step down as a skipper. He was captain and operations manager of the Seaflite hydrofoil vessel during a short-lived attempt at interisland ferry service from 1975-78, and served as captain of the American Cruise Lines' Independence for nearly 10 years until 1992. He was qualified as a Merchant Marine captain and taught navigation at the Pacific Maritime Academy. Kelley, 84, died last Thursday. "He was the fairest man I ever worked for," said Stu Schroeder, who served as maitre d'hotel on the Independence. "He was strict and he was fair. You always knew where he was coming from. There was no hidden agenda. Everyone respected him."Schroeder, now general manager of Sergio's restaurant in Waikiki, said Kelley "would eat with a dishwasher, and he would eat with celebrities" on the interisland cruises. He joined the Navy during World War II, serving on PT boats in the Pacific and participating in the liberation of the Philippines. During his career he had command of the minesweeper Aggressive, destroyer Walker and fleet oiler Chipola. Before retiring in 1974, he was chief of staff of U.S. Naval Forces Korea for 31 months, and on the Joint U.S. Military Assistance Group. He was awarded numerous medals including the Legion of Merit with gold star, China Service Medal, Republic of Vietnam Gallantry Cross and Service Medal, Presidential Unit Citation and National Defense Service Medal. Bill Smith of the Navy Retired Activities Office said Kelley continued to help Navy retirees and their families as a volunteer in that office for the past six years. "He was a compassionate individual and a loyal volunteer. The great thing was, even after he was diagnosed with cancer, he continued to come to the office. He helped many, many people." He received awards of recognition from the governor and mayor for volunteer service with Meals on Wheels in Honolulu. He was active in the Bahai Faith in Rome, Florida, Virginia and Hawaii. His wife, Florence, said Kelley was a member of the Boston Marine Society, established in 1754, as was his grandfather, Nehemiah B. Kelley, a clipper ship captain. The Kelleys celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary this year, but he died three days short of his 85th birthday. Kelley was born in Boston and graduated from Amherst College. He is survived by wife Florence, son Kevin of Virginia, sisters Phyllis Kelley and Marjorie Kellberg, nieces and nephews. Funeral services will be at 1 p.m. Wednesday at Hawaiian Memorial Park Mortuary. A committal service at the Bahai Garden of Light in the cemetery will follow. The family suggests that memorial contributions be made to the American Cancer Society or another charity. [Honolulu Star Bulletin 30 August 2007]

Kennedy Jr., Stanley C., March 28, 2007 Stanley C. Kennedy Jr. was a leader in promoting Hawaii as a visitor destination when the industry was gaining momentum in the 1960s and '70s. "He was one of the people who helped elevate tourism," said Peter Fithian, president of Greeters of Hawaii. As a representative of Hawaiian Airlines, Kennedy "spent a long time selling Hawaiian and Hawaii on the mainland, traveling here and there, a lot of it based on making personal relationships. There was so much that we did to promote this place, and he was right in the middle of it. It was missionary work he was doing up there," Fithian said. Kennedy, 85, died March 28 in Longview, Texas, after a long illness. He worked in the airline industry for 38 years before his retirement in 1983 as Pacific vice president of Continental Airlines. Kennedy served with the Navy in the Pacific during World War II, achieving the rank of lieutenant commander. After the war he joined Hawaiian Airlines, which was founded by his father in 1929. The younger Kennedy started as a mechanic's helper to learn the business from the ground up, according to the airline's 70th-anniversary book. He worked in various positions and was vice president of sales when he left Hawaiian Airlines in 1971 to join Continental Airlines. "He made a difference in supporting the airline industry and the tourism industry," said Ed Swafford, retired vice president of Pan American Airlines Pacific division. "He worked hard at it. We were good friends, and we became stiff competitors" when Continental Airlines entered the Hawaii market, he said. Kennedy "volunteered for many tasks that helped the industry grow," Fithian said. He was on the board of directors of the Hawaii Visitors Bureau and the Honolulu Chamber of Commerce, and an officer of the Visitor Industry Education Council. He was one of the founders of the Pacific Aerospace Museum and a past president of Skat Club of Hawaii, a travel industry fraternal organization. He was on the boards of Air Micronesia and Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Los Angeles and Hawaii. Kennedy was born in Honolulu and attended Punahou School before graduating from Choate School in Connecticut. He earned a bachelor's degree at Yale University. He is survived by wife Nancy; son James Cox Kennedy of Atlanta; daughters Blair Parry-Okaden of Scone, Australia, Lani Pringle of Hillsborough, Calif., and Laura Kennedy of Boulder, Colo.; sister Patricia Scott; and seven grandchildren. At his request, there will be no service. Burial will be in Honolulu. Ku, Ah Jook Leong (1910-2007) Ah Jook Ku, the first Asian-American reporter for the Associated Press and retired executive secretary of the Honolulu Community-Media Council, died Monday in Leahi Hospital at age 97. She also was the first Asian-American female writer for the Honolulu Star-Bulletin. In the 1940s she covered life in China and the government of President Chiang Kai-Shek. But in later years she was regarded as the "guiding force" of the media council, said former Chairman Richard S. Miller. Ku was known as a feisty advocate for freedom of information and journalism standards. Ah Jook Leong Ku was a groundbreaking young reporter in the 1940s, covering life in China and the government of President Chiang Kai-Shek for the Associated Press. She was the first Asian-American reporter for the wire service and the first Asian-American female writer for the Honolulu Star-Bulletin. But she was best known for her later decades as a feisty advocate for freedom of information and journalism standards. Ku was a founding member of the Honolulu Community-Media Council and served for 25 years as its unpaid administrative secretary. Ku, 97, died Monday in Leahi Hospital. "She was the guiding force for the whole thing," said former council Chairman Richard S. Miller, University of Hawaii law professor emeritus. The council "was designed to protect the First Amendment ... and to hold the media to ethical standards." Ku grew up in Ewa Beach, one of 15 children, and "the head of the family wasn't eager about educating women. So she got a scholarship to the University of Missouri Journalism School," Miller said. "She didn't reminisce. She was always up to the minute ... building on what was happening now," he said. "She was very active in the 1980s when the Sunshine Law was being violated and loopholes led to less-than-open government," said Beverly Kever, UH journalism professor. "She was the pivotal point" for community efforts to persuade the state Legislature to keep open government. Attorney Thomas Grande, former director of Common Cause, a citizen watchdog organization, recalled, "She was an activist with a kind heart and a gentle manner, a tireless advocate for free press and for civil liberties. She was very humble. It was never about herself." "Jookie" Ku was one of the original members of Save Our Star-Bulletin, a group of community leaders who successfully sued in federal court to keep Liberty

Newspapers, the former owner, from shutting down the newspaper in 1999. "It was her last hurrah as an advocate," said Miller, also a member of the SOS coalition. Ku worked as an information specialist for the state Department of Education for more than 20 years, retiring in 1975. She retired from the Honolulu Community-Media Council in 2002. The organization presented her with its Fletcher Knebel Award for her contributions to journalism. Ku is survived by sister Yuk Jun Joseph and several nephews and nieces. Funeral services will be held at 10 a.m. Aug. 21 at Borthwick Mortuary. Friends may call after 9 a.m. [Honolulu Star Bulletin 10 August 2007]
