LANHAM, JOHN (1924-2007) Judge's childhood as orphan informed his rulings John Calhoun Lanham, a state legislator and Circuit Court judge for 20 years, died last Tuesday. He was 82. "We were in the Legislature together. We passed the bar exam in the same year in 1955. He was the kindest, purest, most amiable and sympathetic person that I have ever really known," said Walter Heen, an Office of Hawaiian Affairs trustee. Lanham was born in Summerton, S.C., in 1924 and was orphaned when he was 4. He joined the military after turning 18 and served as an aerial gunner on a B-25 medium bomber in the China-Burma-India Theater during World War II. Lanham was also in the 25th Infantry Division during the Korean War. He then became interested in law and politics and graduated from the University of South Carolina School of Law in 1949. He became a judge and attorney in military courts. In 1958, Lanham was elected as a member of the last Territorial Legislature in Hawaii and later became a state representative and then a senator. In 1970 the late Gov. John Burns appointed Lanham as a Circuit Court judge. During Lanham's years as a judge, he acquired a reputation as a "bleeding heart," Heen said. "It was a trait that he acquired as a child, and for him that trait was good," said Heen. Lanham's daughter Patrice Lanham said, "They called him the 'Bleeding Heart' and 'Champion of the Underdog.' ... My father was born an orphan. He told me that he would always stand in line to be picked and no one picked him, which is why he was always trying to help the underdog." Lanham's last service was as the chief of justice of the Republic of the Marshall Islands in 1982. After retiring, Lanham moved to California with wife Annie and his children. He is survived by his wife, daughters Patrice Lanham and Catherine Remely, son Robert and grandchildren Tatum and Kyle Remely. Memorial services will be held at 8:30 a.m. tomorrow at Forest Lawn Memorial in Cathedral City, Calif. For more information, contact Patrice Lanham at (650) 218-3330. Condolences are to be sent to 39495 Manorgate Road, Palm Desert, CA 92211. Donations are suggested to Epworth Children's Home, P.O. Box 50466, Columbia, SC 29250.

Lantz, Robert, a talent agent whose clients ranged from Bette Davis to Leonard Bernstein to Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, died Thursday in Manhattan, where he had lived and worked since 1948. He was 93. The cause was heart failure, said his wife of 57 years, Sherlee, who survives him, along with his son, Anthony. An independent operator in an era of conglomerates, Lantz worked from a small office overlooking Central Park, filled with his books, photographs by Richard Avedon, who was a client, and caricatures by Al Hirschfeld, an old friend. His constellation included writers James Baldwin, Lillian Hellman and Carson McCullers; actors Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton,

Yul Brynner, Montgomery Clift, Myrna Loy and Liv Ullmann; photographer Arnold Newman, film director Milos Forman, playwright Peter Shaffer and lyricist Alan Jay Lerner."I have been very lucky not to represent anyone crazy," he told an interviewer for a Czech weekly newsmagazine in 2003. "Crazy artists are very difficult. My feeling is that one of the biggest problems of our time is that there are so many celebrities being made, but there are very few real stars, people who are truly extraordinarily talented. A celebrity is often not a true star."Born in Berlin on July 20, 1914, Lantz dreamed of being an author like his father, a screenwriter in the silent-movie era. He moved to London in 1935, after Hitler came to power, and worked as a story editor for American film companies. After World War II he went to New York and began a new life representing creative artists: stars of the stage and screen, literary lions and, occasionally, public figures who thought they had a book in them.Lantz was one of the last members of an old school: He did not use e-mail or computers. He took 10 percent of his authors' earnings, not 15 percent, hewing to a tradition widely abandoned in the late 20th century. He made his deals with handshakes. Lim, John S.W. (1951-2007) Judge John S.W. Lim, an associate judge on the Intermediate Court of Appeals, died yesterday. Lim, 55, had served with the state Judiciary since 1993 as District Family Court judge, Circuit Court judge and presiding judge of the Adult Drug Court before his appointment to the appellate court in 1999. "We are devastated by the loss of such a young, intelligent, hard-working and dedicated jurist," said Hawaii Chief Justice Ronald Moon in an announcement yesterday. Lim gave notice last week of his intention to retire on July 1 because of illness. The cause of his death was not released by his family, said a court spokeswoman. "His legacy is tremendous," said Moya Gray, executive director of Volunteer Legal Services of Hawaii. Lim was a founder and first director of the program, organized as Hawaii Lawyers Care, by which lawyers give free legal services to people unable to afford it. "He created the initial program," said Gray. "Without his dedicated service, it wouldn't exist today. Thousands of people have been helped." Honolulu Prosecutor Peter Carlisle said, "When he was elevated to the appellate court, everybody felt it was clearly deserved. He had a superb intellect. I always appreciated his dry, clever sense of humor." Lim aroused criticism for his 1999 sentencing of Kimberly Pada for the beating of her son, Reubyn Buentipo Jr., 4, who was left comatose. A jury found her guilty of attempted murder, but the judge reduced the verdict to attempted manslaughter after jurors expressed confusion over his jury instruction. When former Gov. Benjamin Cayetano appointed Lim to the appeals court later the same year, he was unanimously confirmed by the state Senate after a hearing in which supporters said the flaw was in the law, not in Lim's decision. Jeffrey Portnoy, president of the Hawaii State Bar Association, remembered Lim as "a very courageous judge" for another controversial decision. Lim ruled in 1994 that the Honolulu Police Department must identify officers who had disciplinary action taken against them, information sought by the University of Hawaii chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists. "In a room filled with police officers, in a courthouse overrun by police and their families, despite hundreds of thousands of dollars spent by the city and the police union, he ruled in favor of student journalists," said Portnoy, who represented the students. Lim's ruling was upheld by the Hawaii Supreme Court, but the Legislature passed a law to keep the files secret. "He was a very smart, very courageous man," said Portnoy. "When he was nominated to the appellate court, many of us felt that it was a path that would lead to the Hawaii Supreme Court." President Bill Clinton nominated Lim for the U.S. District Court in June 2000, but the Republican Senate allowed the appointment to languish without a hearing. Lim graduated in 1983 from Stanford Law School. He was formerly general counsel for the Hawaii Economic Development Corp. and an associate attorney with Carlsmith Wichman Case Mukai & Ichiki. His survivors include his wife, Evva, and sons Ethan and Evan. Funeral arrangements are pending. [Honolulu Star Bulletin 14 June 2007]
