Waterhouse, Wallace May 2, 2007 Wallace T. Waterhouse built a Hawaii aviation business that spanned nearly 60 years as it met ever-expanding demands for crop-dusting, interisland flights, pilot training and maintenance service for other aircraft businesses. Waterhouse and his partners formed Murrayair Ltd. in 1948 and later established Air Service Corp. They started O.K. Airlines to provide commuter air service between Oahu and Kauai. It became Princeville Airways and eventually was reorganized as Aloha Island Air. "He was a real pioneer in Hawaii in respect to agricultural aviation," said George Nottingham, former pilot and longtime friend. Waterhouse, 90, of Kailua, died Wednesday in Kailua. He was a machinist and shop supervisor with Douglas Aircraft in California before moving to Hawaii after World War II. His first enterprise, selling American-made sickles in sugar plantation villages on the Big Island, led him to recognize that the small crop-duster planes in operation were not sufficient for the needs of the agriculture industry. "He brought in Stearman biplanes capable of spreading liquid and dry fertilizers and insecticides without needing to refuel so often," said Nottingham. Waterhouse and Phil Murray adapted those and other aircraft, and later put helicopters in operation at Dole, Del Monte and Libby McNeil pineapple plantations and Amfac sugar fields on the major islands. The entrepreneurs expanded operations. They contracted to maintain Army planes at Wheeler Field and went on to provide maintenance service for commuter airlines and corporate aircraft. They became a distributor for Cessna aircraft. "He was highly regarded by the banking and business community," said Nottingham. "He was my mentor," said pilot Bob Fraker, who joined Murrayair in 1964 and retired as president of Air Service Hawaii. Waterhouse joined with Fraker to develop a flight training center whose students went on to fly for commercial airlines. "He was a very honest person, a very intelligent guy who was always discussing business or politics. The companies never missed a payroll and always paid their rent." "He kept going until he was 80," said Fraker. Although he had experience in many aircraft, Waterhouse was best known for the bright yellow World War II courier plane, a Howard DGA 15, that he flew on personal trips between islands. He was born in Toronto. He was inducted into the Aviation Hall of Fame and was a member of Aloha Shriners, the Kaneohe Yacht Club and Ye Ancient and Secret Order of Quiet Birdmen, a national social organization of pilots. He is survived by Olga, his wife of 63 years; daughters Corinne and Eleanor; two grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren. Plans for a celebration of his life are pending. Weinstein, Abe, 58, Jan. 29, 2007 Friends and fellow musicians of jazz promoter Abe Weinstein are pressing ahead to complete his latest project, a Feb. 11 concert at Windward Community College. Weinstein, who suffered from diabetes for two decades and recently underwent heart bypass surgery, was found dead Monday in his Kapiolani Boulevard apartment. "His body was closing down on him. I hope he didn't suffer," said his old friend, artist Pegge Hopper. "Even though he looked terrible right after his surgery, he was still sharp as a tack, his mind on fire with new projects." Weinstein was perhaps best known as founder of the Hawaii International Jazz Festival, created in 1993 and run with a small circle of associates, particularly producer Dana Richie Fujikake. "He was a force to be reckoned with," Hopper said. "With so little help, he did it all himself for several years. He kept plugging away, like a dog with an old sock. I hope Dana can keep it going." The 1 p.m. Feb. 11 concert, featuring Gabe Baltazar, David Choy, DeShannon Higa and others, will be held in Paliku Theatre and is free and open to the public. Weinstein, a noted jazz clarinetist, often sat in on the concerts he promoted. "He was an excellent musician and a fellow artist," said artist Ramsay, who occasionally asked Weinstein to play in her Chinatown gallery. "He made an incredible contribution to Honolulu with his jazz festival." Weinstein was "an old friend, a supporter, a mentor -- I really feel bad he's gone," said John Kolivas, founder of the Honolulu Jazz Quartet. "He helped me a lot over the years. Abe had been in and out of the hospital lately and the diabetes seemed to be getting to him." Born in Miami, Weinstein graduated with a bachelor's degree in music from the Cleveland Institute of Music, then earned a master's in music from the University of Michigan. He performed with the Cleveland Orchestra, the Oregon Symphony, the Winnipeg Symphony, the Lucerne

Switzerland Symphony and the Honolulu Symphony. He was director of the University of Hawaii Stage Band, producer of the Cotton Club Revue and the Mardi Gras Revue, and the conductor of "Dream Girls" and even the Honolulu Symphony, on occasion. At one time the personnel manager of the symphony, Weinstein's primary job was as president of Abe Weinstein Productions, supplying musicians and talent for cruise ships and also creating theme parties for conventions. "We met on a cruise ship, and that started our relationship," Hopper said. "He was the cruise musician and I was the cruise artist. He was such a character! We kind of connected on the spot." Hopper said Weinstein called a few weeks ago and sounded a bit depressed."On behalf of the thousands of music lovers, the countless young musicians who were encouraged and nurtured by the life of this man, and the arts community in Hawaii, we bid a fond and loving aloha to Abe Weinstein," Fujikake said in a prepared statement issued by the jazz festival office. "While we know that nothing can substitute for Abe, his passion will live long and brightly through the creation he was most fond of, the festival." Arrangements are pending. Wilcox, Edith King (1916-2007) Edith King Wilcox, a community volunteer and descendant of early Kauai settlers, died Saturday at Wilcox Memorial Hospital in Lihue. She was 90. King Wilcox was the great-granddaughter of Godfrey Wundenberg, an early settler in Hanalei and treasurer of the Hawaiian kingdom. Her friends knew her as someone who worked hard behind the scenes, allowing others to take credit. "Edie, in her quiet way, never wanted to be in the limelight," said longtime friend Nancy Goodale. "She said she was not a leader, but a follower, yet she got a lot done." King Wilcox was a longtime volunteer at gift shops at Wilcox Hospital and the Kauai Museum. She also helped get a new church built for St. Michael and All Angels Church in Lihue. King Wilcox also ran a nursery business from her greenhouse in Lihue, exporting bird of paradise seedlings to the mainland to raise money for her church, said her nephew Thomas King of Kilauea. She was a strong woman who was interested in everything, King added. King Wilcox is predeceased by daughter Deborah Wilcox Pratt. She is survived by daughters Pamela W. Dohrman and Judith W. King, eight grandchildren and 18 great-grandchildren. King Wilcox's memorial service will be at Lihue Cemetery at 4 p.m. Monday. A reception will follow at Grove Farm Homestead. Woo, Doug Whether he was covering the Democratic National Convention for KGMB-TV or speaking on behalf of the city prosecutor or writing proclamations for the mayor, city information officer and former journalist Doug Woo always believed in the public's right to know, friends and colleagues said. "Doug was always a reporter first," said friend and former Prosecutor Keith Kaneshiro, who tapped Woo to be his spokesman from 1989 to 1996. Woo, 57, died Monday night after complaining of chest pains following a workout at the gym, said Kaneshiro. "Our city ohana is saddened by the sudden passing of Doug Woo," Mayor Mufi Hannemann said in a statement. "Doug was a veteran public information specialist and journalist who will be missed. Our thoughts and prayers go out to his family and friends." Elisa Yadao, a former KGMB reporter, covered government and politics with Woo during the near decade Woo was at the station. She described him as a "formidable reporter." "He did a lot in his coverage of government -- really an advocate for the people and the public interest," she said. "He was a great teacher and a wonderful mentor. ... He was really fearless and tireless in his work and I'm just really devastated by his loss." Yadao recalled when she and Woo covered the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta in 1988. "We had so much fun," she remembered. "The convention was on the East Coast and we'd, like, work all day and all night. I've been spending a lot of time thinking about that today because we had such a riot of fun." Humor was also a Woo calling card, his friends said. "He was very good at doing voices. He was a pretty good sketch artist, too," Yadao said. "He'd do all the politicians -- he'd do (former Gov. George) Ariyoshi and (former Honolulu Mayor Frank) Fasi and all the ones that were in office at the time." Jim Manke, who was KGMB assignment editor and news director when Woo was at KGMB, was among those who described Woo as "relentless." "He was our political reporter and he knew how to dig for a story," Manke said. "He also got a kick out of covering campaigns." Woo began his career as a reporter for the Honolulu Advertiser in 1970, and in 1980 went to work at KGMB. Kaneshiro remembered Woo peppering him with tough questions when he worked at the state Attorney General's Office. "Doug had high principles, strong integrity. He had a disdain for political games," Kaneshiro said. "He believed in people's right to know." Woo's death came as a shock to those who knew him because he took pride in taking care of his health, they said. "He always worked out and he always looked in the prime of health," said Carol Costa, city spokeswoman during former Mayor Jeremy Harris' administration and Woo's former supervisor. Woo began working for the city administration in 1997 after Kaneshiro left office in 1996. Customer Services Director Jeff Coelho, who Woo is survived by his wife, Patricia; two daughters; and a son.
