Dr. Ivar J. Larsen - When his patients and colleagues remember Dr. Ivar J. Larsen, it's not the image of a detached and aloof professional. "When he was in charge of the spine clinic, he would take children on his lap and talk to them, then they didn't mind having the treatment," said nurse Faith Nakano, who served with Larsen during his 25 years as an orthopedic physician and surgeon at Shriners Hospital for Crippled Children. "He was such a fatherly, personable man, a people-loving person. He was a caring man to us as well as patients. I really appreciated him," Nakano said. The hospital's medical staff secretary May Matsumoto said: "We all referred to him as Grandpa Larsen" when he returned to the hospital to keep in touch even after his retirement. "He was a gentle person, well-liked by the staff." Larsen, 82, died Saturday Aug 24, 1996 in Honolulu. He retired in 1978 after 21 years as chief of staff at the hospital. He was in practice at the Honolulu Medical Group from 1949 to 1978. Born in Lordship, Conn., Larsen was a graduate of Cornell University Medical School. John F. Leonard, who brought hundreds of top-flight rock groups to Hawaii during the 1970s and later helped bring a group of struggling Hilo radio stations back from oblivion, died early yesterday Dec 2, 1996 of an apparent heart attack. He was 55. "This is a guy who was a giant in both broadcasting and entertainment," said Ken Hupp, news director of Leonard's KPUA, KWXX and KNWB stations. "His departure leaves a void. We're going to miss him." Born in Sacramento, Calif., Leonard founded Records-Hawaii after moving to Honolulu in 1968. A year later he started JFL Concerts that brought many big name acts to Hawaii including The Jacksons, Rod Stewart, Journey and Janis Joplin. Leonard's company also published the "Sunbums" newspaper, which sought to bridge rock and roll with the local entertainment industry, Hupp said. Leonard began his broadcast career in the 1980s as an account executive and director of promotions at KKUA and KQMQ-FM on Oahu. He moved to the Big Island in 1992 to take over operations of financially troubled KPUA and KWXX-FM for New West Broadcasting. Under his leadership, New West acquired KFSH-FM in Hilo, which became The Wave. Most recently, Leonard launched Digital Satellite Television Co. with stores in Hilo and on Maui and Oahu. Leonard was active in the University of Hawaii, Hilo Athletic Boosters, the Rotary Club of Hilo Bay, and the Big Island Press Club and was president of the East Hawaii Unit of the American Cancer Society. He was also past president of the Hawaii Academy of Recording Artists. "He was a real energetic, enthusiastic kind of guy," said Hupp. "He was very hard driving. He'd look at something and work like a son of a gun to try to accomplish it." Musician Peter Moon was stunned by his old friend's death. "He was very personable, very likable," Moon said. "Any time I was in Hilo, I'd see him ... Business or having a beer with him, he was just a great guy." He is survived by son Christopher; daughter Michelle Edgington; two grandsons and two granddaughters. Funeral arrangements are pending. [SB 03/12/1996]
