Dr. Alvin V. Majoska - Those who knew him well remember Dr. Alvin V. Majoska, forensic pathologist with the medical examiner's office for many years, as a perfectionist and precise master in his work. "The way he conducted an autopsy was very thorough, very efficient and very fast," said Jim Annino, a medical examiner's investigator who worked with Majoska about 10 years. Majoska died Tuesday April 2, 1996 at his Honolulu home. He was 80. "He never voiced an opinion until he was absolutely sure - and then when he did voice it, you could never change his mind," Annino said. Majoska stood by his help, he added. "He might chew you out for a mistake you made, but nobody else had better do it," Annino said. "He was a gentleman as far as I was concerned, somebody I really enjoyed working for, somebody I respected very highly." Majoska was born in Newark, N.J. He attended Rutgers University and the University of Pennsylvania, where he received his medical degree in 1940, later interning in Philadelphia. He became a resident in pathology at Queen's Hospital in 1942 and was in general practice here from 1943 to 1960. He also was the city coroner's physician from 1945 to 1960, before becoming chief medical examiner, a position he held until 1968, when he went on extended active duty with the call-up of the 29th Infantry Brigade of the Hawaii Army National Guard. He returned to civilian life in 1969 and performed autopsies for the city Medical Examiner's Office under contract for more than 10 years after that. Majoska belonged to a number of professional organizations. Additionally, he was a member of the North American Yacht Racing Union and Waikiki and Hanalei Bay Yacht Clubs. Baldwin "Blue" Kaleipokii Makua Sr., 72, who began surfing as a kid on his mother's wooden ironing board and became one of Hawaii's legendary beachboys, died Friday Aug 23, 1996. He had prostate cancer and had been under hospice care at his Kailua home for about six months, his wife, Barbara, said today. He continued going to Waikiki until he became very ill "because that was his life," she said. "If he would see somebody he didn't think was having a very good time, he'd go and talk to them and invite them into a group of local guys. If it made them happy, it made him happy." That was the style of the old-time beachboys, who took tourists surfing and canoeing just to make them love Hawaii, she said. "Blue was really upset with this new type of beachboy thing - you give the money and I'll give you the lesson." When he was young, she said, he would go early in the morning to help his brother, a famous beachboy at the Royal Hawaiian Hotel. After setting up umbrellas and cleaning the beach, he went surfing and didn't return until it was time to take down the umbrellas, she said. Jama Keanu, who paddled with Makua, called him "the blue boy" because his nails and lips were blue with cold, she said. Makua was a master steersman as well as a surfer. He studied the way Duke Kahanamoku paddled "and the way he did everything," his wife said. "This is who he really learned from." He paddled at the Hui Nalu Surf Club with coach John D. Kaupiko and was one of the founders of the Waikiki Surf Club. "He's one of the last good ones," said Archie Kaaua, who started paddling with Makua when he was a teen-ager. "In the ocean, he was unbeatable. In the surf, he was unbeatable." From 1958 to 1963, Makua steered the Waikiki Surf Club to six straight victories in the 40-mile Molokai-to-Oahu canoe race. He was on eight winning teams in 11 races from 1953-1963. "When we got into a canoe to race," Kaaua said, "I don't care how good the crew was or how bad it was, when he was in the boat, we all felt we were supermen and we were going to win, and we did." Wally Froiseth said he and Makua grew up together on the beach, surfing and paddling canoes for the Waikiki Surf Club. "With Blue and the crews we kind of dominated paddling for a few years." They hung out at Kuhio Beach by the old Waikiki Tavern (which had a blue room named for Makua) and dived for fish and turtles (then legal), Froiseth said. "Girls that hung around the beach would cook 'em up for us. In the evening, everyone had a good fish fry or good turtle steak." They asked people on the beach to surf tandem and go canoeing with them, "just to have them enjoy the sport that we enjoyed." He said he and Makua also worked together on boats at Eniwetok after World War II and "had a lot of adventures down there." Makua's wife said her husband was with a group maintaining meteorology stations on Baker Island in the Line Islands when it was bombed in December 1941. While he loved the beach, he couldn't make a living there so he went into construction and became a heavy equipment operator to support his family, she said. Survivors include sons Blue Jr. and Nelson, both of Hawaii, and Alec, of San Francisco; a sister, Violet, and three grandchildren. Memorial services and scattering of ashes will be at 7 a.m. Sept. 14 at the beach fronting Duke's in Waikiki. Mrs. Makua said she didn't dare have the services over Labor Day weekend because of the Liliuokalani races in Kona, which her husband always went to. "Blue wouldn't even be here." [SB 27/08/1996]

John Cline Mann, a surveyor, authority on Hawaiian lands and former Lunalilo Estate trustee, died a week ago Sep 14, 1996 in St. Francis Hospice. The 73-year-old kamaaina was also an ocean sports enthusiast noted for his contributions to surfboard racing. Longtime friend Ron Sorrell, former Outrigger Canoe Club board president, recalled Mann preserved the almost dying sport. "He created a contest, he produced it, he directed it, he judged it and he scored it," Sorrell said. "He brought the sport back to popularity (to) where it's once again booming." Another unique Mann contribution was a device to train canoe paddlers. "Two paddlers could sit in it with paddles. The water would continue to move as opposed to dead water, and coaches could stand by and correct the paddlers' techniques," Sorrell said. Born in Honolulu, the part-Hawaiian Mann followed a life pattern similar to his father's. His father was a surveyor and civil engineer. His maternal grandparents were prominent in Hawaiian affairs. Mann graduated from Punahou School in 1941 and Dartmouth College with a degree in civil engineering in 1944. After Navy service, he joined his father's surveying firm. Mann surveyed much of Hawaii and became knowledgeable on Hawaiian land boundaries and history. In 1972, he joined an engineering firm that later became Austin Tsutsumi & Associates. He retired last year. Mann served as a Lunalilo Estate trustee from 1969 to 1993. He also was a past president and board member of Outrigger Canoe Club, serving as trustee for the Duke Kahanamoku Foundation. He is survived by a sister, Mrs. George Nottingham. Tetsuichi Mitsuda - When he became chairman of the civil engineering department at the University of Hawaii in 1966, he already had overseen design of a master drainage plan for Honolulu and had done survey work for the Wilson Tunnel. "He loved to teach," said Fujio Matsuda, former UH president who met Mitsuda as a fellow undergraduate at Rose Polytechnic Institute in Terre Haute, Ind., in the 1940s. "His office was always open to anyone who needed help. The subjects that he taught were rather difficult but he was always available to help them." Mitsuda died Dec. 21, 1996 at age 71. He retired from the university in 1995, having taught his dynamics course to almost all engineering students who passed through during his tenure. Colleagues and students recall he was always receptive and gracious to those who needed his attention, and that he showed great ingenuity in using visual aids to get across basic concepts. One of his achievements was research and documentation which helped get the Kamehameha V post office on Merchant Street named a historic play his fiddle," Matsuda said. "From the time we were undergraduates together, he was always playing his fiddle; and he kept that up until he died." Born in Honolulu, Mitsuda graduated from McKinley High School. He entered the Army in 1945 and was sworn in at Schofield Barracks with former Gov. George Ariyoshi, later serving in Japan during the occupation. After the service, he earned a bachelor's degree in civil engineering from Rose Polytechnic Institute in 1949. Mitsuda's engineering education also included a master's in 1952 and doctorate in 1965, both from the University of Illinois. Mitsuda is survived by wife Amy; sons Mark K. and Todd K.; and sister, Dr. Hatsuko Mitsuda. Services will be at 4:30 p.m. Thursday at Thurston Chapel at Punahou School. The old post office has the distinction of being the oldest reinforced concrete building west of the Mississippi River. Music was one of Mitsuda's avocations: He began studying the violin at Central Intermediate and attended Punahou Music School, and practiced daily most of his life. He also served on the board of the Honolulu Chamber Music Series for many years.

James Sterling Moir Sr. enjoyed playing with trucks while growing up on sugar mills along the Hamakua Coast that his father helped to build. Moir turned his passion for heavy equipment, especially trucks, into a successful sales career as a distributor for General Motors diesel engines as well as Peterbilt and Kenworth trucks. The Hilo native and Punahou graduate, founder of Moir Industries and Mid-Pacific Industries, died of a heart attack April 2, 1996 in Guam. He was 63. "His conversation and stories is what I'll miss the most," said Betty Scott Moir, referring to her husband. The Moirs would have celebrated their 39th wedding anniversary in September. Moir stayed on as vice president and general sales manager of Moir Industries when it became a wholly owned subsidiary of Honolulu Iron Works in 1963. Later that year, he accepted an assignment to establish and head a Peterbilt division of the company in the Philippines. He stayed for seven years and built factories and roads from scratch for three sugar centrals in Batangas (Luzon), Passi (Panoy) and Tulong (Bacolod). Most of the 400 people he helped train for upper-level positions went on to become managers, his wife says. "What he did in the Philippines has to be one of his greatest accomplishments," Betty Moir added. "It was quite a challenge." In 1965, Moir became a pilot. "He didn't like to fly at first," Mrs. Moir recalled, "but learned how to do it for business purposes. Once he began flying, he loved doing it." Moir founded Mid-Pacific Industries after returning to Eugene, Ore., where he lived from 1970-77. He expanded his business to include Mid-Pac Mironesia, based in Saipan, and Mid-Pac Far East in Guam, and became a distributor for Ottawa Yard Tractor port equipment. Moir sold his business interests two years ago and retired. He and his wife split their time between Guam, Hawaii and California. Some longtime Hawaii residents may remember Moir as a sportscaster of Hilo High basketball games or as the stock car racing announcer at the old Honolulu Stadium in the late Fifties. Moir is survived by his wife; sons James Jr. and John; daughter Heather; and mother-in-law Esther DeHart. Memorial service at 10 a.m. April 12, Central Union Church. [SB 10/04/1996]

Patricia Ann Morley, host of the Catholics in Crisis on radio station K-108 for eight years, died Sunday May 19, 1996 at her Kailua home. Morley, 55, was born in South Dakota. She hosted the radio program from 1987 to 1995 and received the St. Catherine of Sienna Award from the Tridentine Rite Conference in Niagara Falls, Ontario, Canada. She was a Roman Catholic who went to Mass at the Our Lady of Lourdes Chapel, which she helped found. Her church affiliation was at times controversial. She earned a measure of vindication when the Vatican rescinded Bishop Joseph Ferrario's 1991 excommunication of her and five others in mid-1993. Objections were raised because they had associated with the Fraternity of St. Pius X. The St. Pius X Fraternity is an international group and forbidden to have services in Catholic churches, the Catholic diocese said; they are followers of the late French Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, who was excommunicated by the pope after ordaining priests not approved by the Vatican. Her sister Rita Marinoni said the Vatican said this was not sufficient grounds for excommunication. "All I can say is she was the best," Marinoni said. "She had great courage, and she was willing to stand up for what she believed in, no matter what the cost. She was faithful right to the end. She persevered to her last breath.” She also is survived by husband Carl W.; sons Christopher C. and Patrick J.; stepson Corey Morley, and two grandchildren. Mary Musgrove started the first 12 kindergarten centers in Hawaii public schools in 1943. Ten years later, as director of kindergartens for the Department of Public Instruction, Musgrove helped expand that number so pupils could attend any of Oahu's 280 kindergarten classes. In 1946, Musgrove said territorial and school building plans must include kindergarten rooms so "every 5-year-old will have the opportunity of attending school in an environment planned especially to meet his needs." Musgrove died Wednesday Sep 4, 1996 at the age of 90. "She really enjoyed working with young children," said Sarah S. Stoddard, Musgrove's niece. "She was always eager to help young children and to find better ways to help them learn." Musgrove was born in San Francisco. She is also survived by sister Ruth M. Stearns; and nephew Stephen C. Stearns. Private services were held. Donations may be made to Pomona College Scholarship Fund, 305 N. College Ave., Claremont, Calif. 91711. [SB 07/09/1996]
