Minuth, Fred 'Fritz' G., 84, the management of the Chicago White Sox was shocked. The young boy, fresh out of high school with the talent to play professional baseball, turned down an offer to play for the organization. Instead, he opted to pursue a college degree. So began the successful and varied career of the Rev. Fred "Fritz" G. Minuth, a nuclear physicist, Marine, teacher, coach, headmaster and priest in the Episcopal Church in Hawai'i. Minuth died June 23 of natural causes. He was 84. "He was inspiring to me. He was a bigger-than-life kind of person," said his daughter, Dorsey Gibson. Born in Chicago, Minuth was an athletic youth who played football and baseball during high school. In the 1930s, he would regularly suit up during summer practice and catch baseballs with the White Sox. The club later offered him a minor-league contract, but he declined. "They were quite taken aback," said son Reed Minuth. After receiving his degree in physics and chemistry from a college in Colorado, Minuth served in the Marine Corps during World War II. He later made his way to Hawai'i and was the head football coach at Punahou School in the 1940s. "He inherited a team that had three returning starters," Gibson said. "They were supposed to finish in the cellar or not far from it and he took them to within 20 seconds of the championship." During the 1950s, after coaching college football in Colorado, Minuth moved his family to New Mexico where he worked as a nuclear physicist at Los Alamos. He later worked at the Argonne National Laboratory in Chicago as a nuclear physicist. At the age of 37, Minuth left Chicago to study at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific in Berkeley, Calif. Although he found work as a nuclear physicist fascinating, the ethical issues of working with atomic weapons bothered him, Gibson said. "The power of destruction was a little overwhelming for him," Gibson said. "Religion became hugely important to him, preserving God's creation rather than the other way around." Later, he moved with his family back to Hawai'i, where a college friend was the archbishop in Honolulu. Through it all, Minuth never lost his passion for sports. He was a chaplain and athletic director at Iolani School and later worked as associate rector of the Church of the Holy Nativity. In 1969, Minuth began a 12-year career as the headmaster of St. Andrew's Priory in Honolulu. He also coached the school's softball team. "He kind of couldn't get out of coaching. I know it just tickled him," Reed Minuth said. Fred Minuth is survived by his wife, Nancy; sons, Reed and Eric; daughter, Dorsey Gibson; and five grandchildren. Visitation will be at 9 a.m. Saturday at St. Andrew's Cathedral. A service will begin at 10 a.m. The family requests no flowers. Donations can be made to St. Andrew's Priory Chaplain Fund. Arrangements are by Hawaiian Memorial Park Mortuary. (Honolulu Advertiser 12 July 2006)

MONSON, ASTRID (1913-2006) Astrid Monson, whose soft voice and strong convictions helped guide land use in Honolulu, died Monday. She was 93. She and her late husband, Donald, moved to Hawaii in 1973 to retire after global careers as planners. But she never slowed down, instead devoting days and nights to volunteer work for the League of Women Voters and other groups, commuting by bus from her Kailua home to testify on issues. "I think it can be said very forcefully that the League of Women Voters, and in particular Astrid Monson, has been the voice of the conscience for good planning in Hawaii for decades," Luciano Minerbi, professor of urban and regional planning at the University of Hawaii, said yesterday. "If they would have listened to her more, we would have been in much better shape right now." She won some battles and lost others but was respected by both sides. She pushed for controls on urban sprawl across the island and instead boosted the creation of the second city in Ewa, an effort she felt got mostly lip service. She opposed rail transit and efforts to raise height limits on buildings downtown and in Waikiki. "She was very dignified in the way that she handled herself and the way that she made her arguments," said former Gov. Ben Cayetano. "You just couldn't help but be impressed by how she conducted herself." "She obviously was well educated, that came through time and again, but it was never like a professor talking to a student," he added. "She lived a full and enriching and productive life." Monson was born in Berlin to American parents, but her family moved back to the United States shortly afterward and she grew up in Chicago. She got her bachelor's and master's degrees from Northwestern University, where she met her husband. She and her husband worked on reconstruction programs in Europe under the Marshall Plan, according to her longtime friend Arlene Kim Ellis. They also handled planning and housing projects for the United Nations Development Program in Nairobi, Kenya; Buenos Aires, Argentina; and Taipei. She taught at the Pratt Institute and at Taida University in Taipei. In Hawaii, Monson helped found Hawaii's Thousand Friends and the Consumers Housing Task Force. She wrote columns for both Honolulu newspapers on planning issues and was recognized in 2003 by the Honolulu City Council for "her vigilant advocacy in formulating land use policy." "We used to fight about certain things, but I don't remember ever winning an argument," Ellis said. "I did not mind losing because every time I lost, I learned something." About five years ago, Monson moved into a nursing home on Pacific Heights but remained mentally vigorous until the end, when she succumbed to a heart attack or stroke, Ellis said. The Monsons had no children. A private celebration of her life is being planned. (Honolulu Star Bulletin 6 April 2006)

MOSSMAN, PUALANI, For more than 50 years, Pualani Mossman (Avon) epitomized the image of a Hawaiian hula dancer as the original poster girl for Matson cruises and the Hawaii Visitors Bureau. But Mossman was more than just a pretty face and entertainer. She was honored among those who fought for Hawaii's statehood, and recognized by civic and community groups for her contributions. And she continued to be an inspiration well into her 80s to mainland audiences whose hearts were homesick for Waikiki, according to her son, Randy Avon Jr. Mossman, 89, died in Florida on May 8. She and her late husband, Randy Avon, had lived in Florida since 1951, but Mossman made annual visits to her family in Kailua and the Big Island, her son said. Island entertainer Kimo Kahoana, who met Mossman on his former KCCN radio show in the 1990s, last year wrote a song, "Pualani," based on his admiration for a woman with whom he made a strong spiritual connection. He also found out they were distant cousins through his grandmother, Helen Boyd, Kahoano said. "Her sweet smile, gentle demeanor, and love for all that was Hawaiian" impressed him. "You could see her eyes light up, and her face would get wonderfully animated when she got to dance the hula ... Something about her was very, very spiritual. She just had a special, wonderful awareness (of the Hawaiian lifestyle) and everything she said was always positive. We had a special connection." Kahoano and his son held a private concert for Mossman last year, and introduced the song he wrote for her. It describes the way her husband fell in love with her the first time he saw her dancing in New York. In the second verse, Kahoano described her as "a gift of aloha." Mossman and her sisters taught hula at the Lalani Hawaiian Village, owned by her father, George P. Mossman, on land now occupied by the Marriott Hotel in Waikiki, according to her son. She starred in the first color movie made in Hawaii, "Song of the Islands," and showed the film to senior citizens when she visited the islands. She then danced for them, as well as other audiences in Florida until this year, her son said. In a 1999 Star-Bulletin interview, Mossman recalled "dancing at the opening of the Royal Hawaiian Hotel when all you could see along the beach were the waves and sandy beach," instead of hotels, cars and hookers in Waikiki. In 1937, Matson Navigation sent her to New York City to be photographed for a national advertising campaign to promote their cruise ship lines. She became known as the "Matson Girl," appearing in national magazines, the article said. The classic picture of her with a red hibiscus in her hair is still being used to advertise Marriott hotels, her son said. Mossman also starred as a hula dancer at the Lexington Hotel in New York City, appeared in "Hellzapopping" on Broadway. She is also survived by daughters Pualani Love and Leilani Longbons. Another son, Richard, died four years ago. She has 10 grandchildren and 20 great-grandchildren. A Florida memorial service will be held at 1 p.m. Saturday at the Baird Case Funeral home in Fort Lauderdale. A service in Honolulu will be held later this month when she is buried at Diamond Head cemetery. (Honolulu Star Bulletin 10 May 2006)
