NAKAMURA, MICHAEL (1947-2006) Former Police Chief Michael Nakamura, who bravely battled a degenerative disease and injuries after he was hit by a car in his motorized wheelchair, died yesterday at Kuakini Medical Center. He was 58. Nakamura, who served as police chief from 1990 to 1997, was also a former member of the state Board of Education and a 2002 candidate for City Council. "He was a good friend, a complete gentleman and one of the finest law-enforcement officers ever to serve the people of the state of Hawaii," said City Prosecutor Peter Carlisle, for whom Nakamura worked twice as campaign manager. "He was cheerful, he was upbeat. Despite all the physical difficulties he encountered later in his life, I have never seen a man with such a remarkable spirit. He had a kind of gentle courage and humor that came out even under the worst of circumstances." Mayor Mufi Hannemann described Nakamura as a "close friend and confidant" who shared his Kalihi roots. "We worked closely together when I was on the City Council and he was Honolulu's police chief," Hannemann said in a statement. "As chief, he was respected by the community and popular among the men and women who served with him on the police force." HPD Lt. Letha DeCaires, watch commander for communications and former CrimeStoppers coordinator, described Nakamura as "very beloved" among the department's rank and file. "There was probably never another chief who remembered every employee's birthday," she said. "He had a way of making every employee -- over 2,000 people -- feel special and unique." Detective Alex Garcia, Oahu chapter chairman of the State of Hawaii Organization of Police Officers, the police union, said, "We are all deeply saddened by his passing. He was a great chief and a very warm person. He knew everyone by his first name. He was always active in the interests of the officers. He was a wonderful man." Nakamura was diagnosed with spinal muscular atrophy, a disease that weakened the muscles in his back, hips and shoulders, ultimately leaving him unable to walk. The disease is related to Lou Gehrig's disease, but progresses less swiftly. Nakamura spent more than a decade in a wheelchair or motorized scooter, but that did not seem to slow him down. With his mental faculties undiminished, he was elected to the state Board of Education after he was named to fill a vacancy in 2000. He also served as chairman of Hannemann's unsuccessful bid for mayor that year. But Nakamura's fortunes took a calamitous turn on Sept. 29, 2004, when he was struck by a car in Mililani while in a crosswalk in his electric wheelchair. He sustained severe injuries, including a broken leg, and suffered a stroke as a result of the ensuing surgery. Remarkably, Nakamura later publicly forgave the driver, Anthony G. Pearce, 21, who last August pleaded no contest to fleeing the scene of the accident and driving without a license; he was sentenced to five years' probation. Nakamura said he did not want Pearce to go to prison. "As Christians, we are supposed to forgive," he said. "If anything, I hope he turns his life around." Nakamura was raised in Kalihi and graduated from Farrington High School in 1965. He served in the Air Force before joining HPD in 1970. Former Police Chief Lee Donohue, then a detective, remembers Nakamura as a young officer in the records division. Although junior to Donohue, Nakamura preceded him as chief. "Mike was a great person and a great chief," Donohue recalled yesterday. "He had a lot of compassion for the employees and the people and I'm just sorry to see him go. I think if it wasn't for him, I probably would not have had my chance to become chief. I owe him a lot." Around 1994 or 1995, Nakamura was still walking on his own but would occasionally stumble and fall, recalled Donohue, then one of his deputies. He pulled Donohue aside and disclosed his illness. "He asked me, 'When should I tell people that I have this disease?' I said, 'Chief, you'll know when it's time.' He told me how it had affected his family -- because his father had had it -- and he said, 'My body may not work as it should, but my mind will always be sharp,' and I said, 'I think so.'" As chief, Nakamura is remembered for his efforts to improve morale and institute fair standards for advancement and special training. He set up a special unit to handle child abuse. The HPD Web site lauds his efforts to bring the department closer to the community through decentralization and expanded roles for officers. One of Nakamura's last public appearances was at the first Kapolei City Lights ceremony last Christmas, when he was honored by the mayor. "His forgiveness of the young man who struck him down was an indication of the kind of man Mike Nakamura was," said Hannemann. "That generous act embodied the Christmas spirit, and that is why we chose Chief Mike to be the guest of honor." Both Carlisle and Donohue said they talked to Nakamura by phone in recent weeks and he insisted he was fine. "True to form, he would not admit he was struggling," Donohue said. "Our condolences to his family." Nakamura taught a class in the administration of justice at Honolulu Community College and served on the boards of the Muscular Dystrophy Association of Hawaii, the Blood Bank of Hawaii and the American Diabetes Association. NAKATSUKA, LARRY, Former Star-Bulletin reporter Larry Nakatsuka often described his assignment on Dec. 7, 1941, the day Japan attacked Pearl Harbor. At first his editor "thought it might not be safe for a reporter with a Japanese face to go outside the city room searching for news," Nakatsuka recalled in a December 1999 newspaper column. But he was soon sent to the Japanese Consulate and took along the newspaper's extra edition with a headline proclaiming "War." As he attempted to interview Consul Nagao Kita, Honolulu police officers arrived to detain the ranking Japanese official. Nakatsuka, later an aide to two Hawaii governors and U.S. Sen. Hiram Fong, died Sunday in Straub Hospital. He was 85. He was honored with a Lifetime Achievement Award by the Asian American Journalists Association at its August 2000 national convention. Nakatsuka joined the Star-Bulletin after graduating from St. Louis School in 1939, the first Japanese-American reporter on the staff. He was the first Japanese American to win a Harvard University Nieman Fellowship, leaving Hawaii for a year of study in 1951-52. "That wasn't easy to come by," said former reporter Lyle Nelson. "I remember him as a good writer. He was a nice guy, very modest." Nakatsuka covered the labor beat and was promoted to assistant city editor. He became press secretary to the late territorial Gov. Samuel Wilder King in 1953 and continued in the position for Gov. William Quinn during Hawaii's statehood admission. Quinn appointed him deputy director of the former Department of Social Services. In 1955, he went on a speaking tour for the U.S. Information Agency to Burma (Myanmar), Pakistan, India and the Philippines. He moved his family to Washington, D.C., in 1963 to serve as legislative assistant, and later executive assistant, to Fong and remained through history-making legislation, including the Civil Rights Act, Voting Rights Act and Immigration Reform Act, until Fong's retirement. Nakatsuka was vice president for legislative affairs for the Chamber of Commerce of Hawaii from 1976 until his retirement in 1983. Nakatsuka last wrote a viewpoint column for the Star-Bulletin for the 2004 Admission Day holiday. He reminded readers, "There were tens of thousands of Hawaii residents, like myself, who were second-class citizens. Those were the years before statehood; before we became first-class citizens." Born in Hanalei, Kauai, he was named Kaoru Nakatsuka. The faculty at St. Louis School called him Lawrence, a name that stuck for life. He is survived by sons Roy and Paul, daughter Laura, brother James, and sisters Audrey Oyama and Leslie Miyashiro. Funeral services will be at 1 p.m. Saturday at Honpa Hongwanji Betsuin. Inurnment will be private. The family asks that casual attire be worn. Borthwick Mortuary handled arrangements. (Honolulu Star Bulletin 4 January 2006)

Norris, Robert Benjamin Sept. 12, 2006 Robert Benjamin Norris, renowned watercolor painter who built the University of Hawaii art department and transformed the broader art community, died Sept. 12 in Philadelphia. He was 96. "Ben Norris was instrumental in shaping the course of art in Hawaii," said Lisa Yoshihara, UH Art Gallery director. He helped develop "a contemporary art focus" by inviting acclaimed artists here as professors and visitors, she said. Norris was a UH art professor for 39 years and chairman of the art department from 1945 to 1955, "making it into a very lively place," said Murray Turnbull, one of the artists brought here by Norris in 1954. Turnbull, who retired from UH in 1985, said Norris "was quite enthusiastic" about developing the art department, bringing in such internationally famous artists as Jean Charlot, Max Ernst, Josef and Annie Albers, and Dorothea Tanning. Norris, a Quaker, also was known for his work for peace. He was one of the leaders of the anti-Vietnam War movement at UH. "He was a vibrant presence in our Quaker meeting and was active in peace and social concerns in the community," said Peggy Broderick, clerk of worship and ministry at the Quaker Center, 2426 Oahu St. Norris' daughter, Maggie Castrey, in a written announcement of his death, said beginning in the 1950s he devoted much of his energy to peace activism, a commitment he kept throughout his life. "He loved adventure and travel and completed his last around-the-world trip when he was 87, when he helped facilitate Alternatives to Violence workshops." She said he worked tirelessly on academic and community committees and in the Religious Society of Friends. "He worked and studied in later life to find peace as an 'OK Male,' demonstrating his deep humanity by seeking social justice and self-acceptance for members of the gay, lesbian and bisexual communities," she said. Even Alzheimer's disease could not destroy his "compassionate and generous heart and an ingrained courtesy," Castrey wrote. Norris was born in Redlands, Calif., and attended Pomona Colleges, Harvard University and the Sorbonne. He pursued his career as a landscape painter, exhibiting often as part of the California Watercolor School. He came to Hawaii in 1936 as the first art teacher at the Kamehameha School for Boys and joined UH after a year, staying until he retired in 1976. A biography of Norris by the Isaacs Art Center, Hawaii Preparatory Academy, said he built "an academic and artistic environment that transformed the city and university campus from a modest art locale to a bustling epicenter of lectures, seminars and activities." Lois Pan of New York, spending two years as resident at the Quaker Center, said Castrey plans to bring her father's ashes here. A Quaker memorial service will be held at 4 p.m. Feb. 3 at the Quaker Meeting House in Manoa. Instead of flowers, contributions may be sent to the Friends Center Green Building Fund, 1501 Cherry St., Philadelphia, PA 19102. (Honolulu Star Bulletin 14 October 2006)
