Marion Saunders - Former school board member and social advocate Marion Saunders never stopped working to make Hawaii a better place—even up to the day she died, friends said. Saunders, 89, of Honolulu, died Aug. 6, 1998 at Straub Hospital. “She was interested in all projects or events that concerned the public,” said Arlene Ellis, past president of the League of Women Voters of Hawaii. “She was that type of person. She wanted to enhance what was going on in Hawaii.” Saunders and her late husband, Allan, a University of Hawaii professor and dean, founded the League of Women Voters of Honolulu in 1948. In 1965, she worked to expand the league into a statewide organization. She also helped launch the Hawaii chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. Education was Saunders’ passion. As a WAVE officer during World War II, she taught officer candidates about weekly war developments. She also was principal of the Territory of Hawaii’s first adult continuing education school. At the East-West Center, she was in charge of helping Micronesian students. In 1968, she launched a continuing education program for women at the University of Hawaii, a precursor to the Women’s Studies program. She was elected to the school board in 1974 and served until 1981. After her stint on the board, she continued to testify at the Legislature about school problems and needs and what ought to be done to address them, and worked on issues like charter schools. “She was always very concerned about education,” Ellis said. “What’s more important than education?” During the last two years of her life, she proposed and helped found the University of Hawaii’s Academy of Lifelong Learning and formed a discussion group to help plot a new course for the East-West Center. “She would never quit,” Ellis said. “We tried to force her to go to only one meeting per day rather than four or five, but it was a very difficult thing to do. You could not squelch this woman’s enthusiasm.” A memorial service is scheduled for 4 p.m. Sunday in the auditorium of the UH Architecture Building. In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to the UH Foundation Allan and Marion Saunders Lifelong Learning Endowment.

Zena Mossman Schuman, a kamaaina well-known for her business activity and philanthropic work, especially for her part in co-founding Honolulu Waldorf School, died last Thursday Aug 27, 1998 in St. George, Utah, having turned 96 two days before. Her husband, Gustave William Schuman, who died in 1963, the son of the founder of Schuman Carriage Co., served as president and general manager of this family enterprise, having been its treasurer earlier. Zena Schuman became a director and corporate secretary of Schuman Carriage Co. in the 1950s and continued in that capacity for some years after her husband's death. The business remains in the family. Born in Honolulu, she was the daughter of Harry and Leilani Holt Mossman. Waldorf School in Niu Valley opened in 1961. It was then known as Mohala Pua School, and Zena Schuman was president and chairman of the board. She enunciated the school approach to learning simply. "What we're trying to shape and form is a rounded, balanced individuality," she said. Bonnie Ozaki-James, faculty chairwoman of Honolulu Waldorf School, said the philosophy is the same at the school but the curriculum has adapted to needs of children of today. Grades run from preschool through high school. "The school has an incredibly interesting and exciting curriculum," she added. "Zena's contribution to education in Hawaii has spanned three generations so far, and we hope will continue well into the future." Zena Schuman moved to Utah some years ago but frequently returned here. She was on hand for the graduation of Waldorf's first high school class in June. A graduate of the Kamehameha School for Girls, she also attended schools on the mainland. Active in a number of civic and community groups, her affiliations included leadership roles in Soroptimist, Anthroposophical Society and Daughters of 16 Zena Mossman Schuman Hawaii. She is survived by son G.E. "Dutch" Schuman; daughters Carol Leilani Schuman and Manulani S. Lyall; sister Leilani Houtchens; six grandchildren; and 13 great-grandchildren. Funeral services will be at 3 p.m. Wednesday at Kawaiahao Church. The family requests aloha attire. Inurnment will be private. In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to Honolulu Waldorf School-Schuman Fund, 350 Ulua St., Honolulu 96821.

Kenso Seki was a link in the history of his hometown, but he didn't dwell in the past. At age 88, he undertook a new adventure, playing a role in the "Father Damien" movie filmed this summer at Kalaupapa. Seki was present when the body of Father Damien DeVeuster was moved from his grave on the Molokai peninsula in 1936 for reburial in his Belgian homeland. He was one of two surviving patients who had lived in the original leprosy settlement at Kalawao, the peninsula's windy eastern side where Damien served. When Seki was sent to Kalawao in 1928, Brother Joseph Dutton, a man who had helped Damien, was still working at the settlement. Seki died Saturday at the Kalaupapa Hospital. Funeral services and burial were held later the same day. "There was something about Kenso that whoever knows him, he touches their lives," said head nurse Fe Austria-Schwind. "He was a happy-go-lucky man, nothing disturbed him. He never said bad words about anything, he was so positive about life, not worried about anything." "It was a highlight of his life to be in the movie," she said. Seki suffered a stroke the day after attending a "wrap party" thrown by the movie company at the end of filming. "For him, it had been a big event to be in this movie," said co-producer Grietje Lammertyn of the Belgian movie company, who ate dinner with him at the party. "He had a speaking part, he was happy about that." Long before the movie, Seki was delighted to point out his more real link to Damien, who arrived in Kalawao May 10, 1873, and died of leprosy 16 years later. Seki's birthday was May 10, a match made even more serendipitous when Pope John Paul II designated that date as Damien's feast day in the Catholic Church's liturgical calendar. Seki was one of six patients who participated in the July 1995 reburial of a relic, the bones of Damien's right hand, in the original Kalawao grave site following beatification of the missionary. The walls inside Seki's house are covered with pennants from hundreds of American, European and Asian cities, landmarks and visitor attractions. He collected them in numerous trips that he and his traveling companion, Ed Kato, who died earlier this year, took after mandatory isolation of Hansen's disease patients was ended in 1969. "Looking at him . . . sometimes he was reluctant at first because of his condition. But he thought why not, and then he got the bug to travel," recalled Henry Nalaielua, president of the Patients' Council. "Kenso was a man of goodwill," said Nalaielua. He said Seki worked as a truck driver at the settlement, and served as scoutmaster for several years for a younger generation of patients. Until recent years, his services as a barber were in demand. In recent years, all drivers in the small community were alert for the approach of Seki in his ancient pickup truck. Because of failing eyesight, he preferred to drive about 5 mph down the middle of the road. Sister Dativa Padilla, a Kalaupapa nurse, said Seki was the state's oldest altar server. Since his teen years, he assisted priests at daily Mass at St. Francis Church in Kalaupapa and on special occasions at the Kalawao church that Damien built, St. Philomena's. Seki was born on the Big Island. Like so many of the thousands of people banished because of the disease, he lost touch with his family after being taken away at age 12. [SB 25 Aug 1998]
