Edward A. Berlin would have learned this week that he is one of the first five law enforcement officers chosen to be inducted into the Hawaii Joint Police Association's new hall of fame. Berlin, 75, spent nearly 30 years with the Naval Criminal Investigation Service, retiring as special agent in charge here. He later became director of security with the Navy Exchange at Pearl Harbor. He died Saturday Sep 26, 1998 at his Kahala home. The organization of federal, state, county and military police will still honor Berlin in December, posthumously, said association President Donald Devaney. The Pearl Harbor Rotary Club honored Berlin yesterday with a moment of silence, said Rotary district governor Roy King. It's a tradition that will be followed at other Rotary meetings this week for Berlin, who was such an enthusiastic member of the service organization that he attended two or three meetings a week. Berlin served as the Hawaii district governor in 1986-87 and was a past president of the Waikiki Rotary Club. He was currently chairman of the board of the Hawaii Rotary Youth Foundation. "He was everybody's counselor and advisor, a source of information and guidance for everyone about Rotary," King said. "He was a very caring person. He took a great deal of interest in helping other people develop their careers." Devaney said: "I always remember him for providing inspiration to young people. He spent a lot of time on the foundation's youth activities. They took a lot of kids down to Kilauea military camp. When he got involved, he got it organized and got the results. "He was a great humanitarian, he reached out to you," Devaney said. "He was always a guy you could talk to, and he didn't know how to say no. He was involved in numerous community activities for the good of the state. What I liked was that he was a non political guy, very balanced." Berlin was born in Kinney, Minn. He was in the Army when he came to Hawaii during World War II. He became a lieutenant colonel in the Army Reserve, commanding the Hawaii 40th Special Forces (green berets) detachment in Southeast Asia during the Vietnam War. He was a trustee with the Oddfellows lodge and a supporter of the Hawaiian Humane Society. Berlin is survived by his wife, Lucille; brother, Lee; sisters Florence and Marce; and nieces and nephews. Services are at 11 a.m. Saturday at Star of the Sea Church. Friends may call after 10 a.m. The ashes will be scattered at sea. The family suggests memorial contributions be made to the Salvation Army or Hawaiian Humane Society.

Alfred Mitchell Bingham, a well-born, well-heeled radical who made a broken field run through 20th century intellectual history, coming of age as a rock-ribbed Republican in the 1920s, veering left in the 1930s as a leader of the quest for an American-style collectivism, then returning to the capitalist fold in the 1940s as a straight-ticket Democrat, died Monday Nov 2, 1998 at his home in Clinton, N.Y. He was 93, and as an author and founder of the journal Common Sense had written extensively about once-burning social, political and economic issues. A Mayflower descendant whose grandfather and great-grandfathers, both named Hiram Bingham, were prominent Protestant missionaries in Hawaii and the Pacific, he was the son of Hiram Bingham III, an explorer and historian who discovered the Incan ruins at Machu Picchu in Peru, taught Latin American history at Yale, then entered Connecticut Republican politics, eventually serving eight years as a U.S. senator. His mother was Alfreda Mitchell, a granddaughter of Charles Tiffany, the founder of the Fifth Avenue store whose wealth, as Bingham documented in a privately published 1995 book, helped seed generations of Bingham enterprises.

LOUIS B. Blissard, 84, a former U.S. attorney for Hawaii, died Tuesday May 12, 1998. He was also a lawyer in private practice. U.S. District Judge Samuel P. King said: "Gen. Lou Blissard was a great patriot, a strong and effective United States attorney, an excellent lawyer, a devoted parent and husband, and my friend. "When we were both younger, we used to lunch together from time to time at the Pearl Harbor Naval Officers' Club. I always enjoyed it when he drove into a parking space reserved for general officers, but Lou Blissard never let his rank and accomplishments affect his behavior. He was a modest gentleman.” He was legal adviser to the U.S. Veterans Administration office and enforcement director for the Hawaii branch of the former Office of Price Stabilization. Blissard was a veteran of World War II. He had more than six years of active service and was commander of “Maui’s Own” Fourth Marine Division. He retired as a brigadier general. Born in Port Norris, N.J., he is survived by wife Bernice; daughter Lani; stepchildren Steve and Tony Berkson and Lisa Berkson Platt; a granddaughter; and three great-grandchildren. Inurnment: 10:30 a.m. Tuesday at National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific, Punchbowl.

Harold Blomfield died Feb. 7, 1998 of cancer. After a varied career wrestling a living from the ocean during which he overcame several cases of the bends and ciguatera poisoning, “We thought he was just invincible,” said his widow, Tinker. “We were just glad we had those last two months to have our aloha time before he died.” Born in Honolulu in a war-time hospital at the Kamehameha Schools and raised in Kahuku, Blomfield was one of the original black coral divers off Lahaina in the ’60s. He quit the business before it became a major industry after he got such a serious case of the bends that doctors told Blomfield he would never walk again. Blomfield had made a living fishing and diving on all the major Hawaiian Islands before returning to Haleiwa to fish with his brother, Barry. Finally, he got into crab trapping on his own. He also took camera crews aboard his boat Huki to film various action segments for several Hollywood movies, and was featured in a Discovery Channel special on tiger sharks. He also was featured in National Geographic during his black coral diving days, but he was especially proud of his son Kolohe’s success as a professional surfer. Blomfield also was a member of the state Shark Task Force in the early ’90s. Later, whenever surfers would complain of being menaced by large, aggressive tiger sharks, Blomfield would catch a few large tigers to keep the state from implementing a shark-eradication program. Most of people in Haleiwa know him as the crab man, said Tinker. “He sat under a special kamani tree near Haleiwa harbor to sell fresh crab and talk story. He was a good listener. “He gave so much of himself to people just by taking the time to listen to their troubles.” Born in Honolulu, he is survived by wife Leslie “Tinker”; son Kolohe; daughters Brynn Blomfield and Dane Ward; brothers Barry and Richard; sister Leinaala Benson; and two grandsons. Services held.

Harriet Bouslog, an attorney who helped make the ILWU respectable and who was involved in landmark court cases, died Saturday Apr 18, 1998 in St. Francis Hospital. She was 85. She was credited with helping convert Hawaii from a near-feudal society to one in which respect for civil liberties and workers rights are paramount. She was a partner with the firm Bouslog & Symonds. "I guess probably her greatest contribution was as a lawyer who was willing to put her neck out for civil liberties," said Norman Meller, University of Hawaii professor emeritus of political science. "You had the period of time in which you had the McCarthy scare, and Communists were being discovered both in unlikely places as well as likely places," Meller said. "We had, of course, the (Hawaii Seven) suit here, and very definitely at that time, anyone associated with the individuals concerned— they were associated with the leadership of the ILWU—was pretty well tarred as if not a Communist, a sympathizer." Bouslog was not to be swayed by passions of the times or popular hysteria, Meller said. "She was willing to take a position of defending rights under the Constitution." Florida-born Bouslog was admitted to practice law in Hawaii in 1941. World War II found her in the nation's capital, where she was recruited to work for the ILWU by its president, Harry Bridges. She returned to Hawaii after the war to defend union members who had been arrested for various offenses while on strike. Bouslog unmercifully assaulted the 1850 Unlawful Assembly and Riot Act, under which workers had been charged. The territorial Supreme Court sustained her on every count, and workers went free. The years 1947-55 found her island-hopping throughout the territory to keep ILWU members out of jail. Although her defense contribution during the Smith Act trial was limited primarily to research, she managed to get in trouble for remarks made outside the court. At a Dec. 14, 1952, Big Island union meeting, she said: "There is no such thing as a fair trial in a Smith Act case. All rules of evidence . . . have to be scrapped or the government can't make a case. . . . They just make up rules as they go along." Her remarks called her conduct into question and prompted an investigation by the U.S. attorney's office. Although the Hawaii Seven, including ILWU leader Jack Hall, were convicted in the seven-month Smith Act trial of 1952-53, their convictions later were overturned by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Proceedings against Bouslog began well after the Smith Act trial, and on April 6, 1956, the territorial Supreme Court ordered her suspended from practice for a year. Bouslog insisted on taking an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court. On June 29, 1959, the Supreme Court by a 5-to-4 vote overturned her suspension on grounds there was not enough evidence to support it. "I have always felt my position would be vindicated," she said then. "I will be more careful about what I say in the future, but I will never keep my mouth shut when I can open it to help out." Bouslog represented not only the ILWU and its members but also poor and underrepresented citizens. She was a prime mover in getting capital punishment outlawed in Hawaii. In later life, she was honored with the Allan F. Saunders Civil Liberties Award by the American Civil Liberties Union and with resolutions by the state Legislature and City Council. A law graduate of Indiana University, her alma mater honored her in 1989 when she became a Fellow of its Academy of Distinguished Alumni. The Harriet Bouslog Labor Scholarship Fund she established each year has provided four-year scholarships to the University of Hawaii to eight children of ILWU members. She is survived by husband Stephen T. Sawyer. Memorial services will be held at the ILWU meeting hall at 451 Atkinson Drive at 10 a.m. Sunday . Contributions may be made to the Harriet Bouslog Labor Scholarship Fund, 63 Merchant St., Honolulu 96813.
