Lani Kai represented the image of the handsome, native Polynesian man for viewers of a television series in the early '60s. "Adventures in Paradise," which starred Gardner McKay, gave Kai his big break in show business. He played a crewman aboard the schooner "Tiki." Kai, whose real name was George Clarence Dennis James Von Ruckleman Woodd III, died Tuesday Aug 24, 1999 at a friend's North Shore home at age 63, says his half-brother Kalai Strode of Glendora, Calif. Kai also had a feature role in Elvis Presley's hit movie, "Blue Hawaii" and was one of Hawaii's notable songwriters. His signature song, "Puka Shells," along with "Tutukane" are among his best-known compositions. "He was a very creative guy and we were working on some songs and scripts for screenplays," entertainer Nephi Hannemann said. "His death is a real shock." Clayton Naluai of "The Surfers" recalls Kai entertaining in Waikiki in the late '50s. "We all started at the same time, around 1957," Naluai said. "Before then, entertainment here was mostly just singing. There was no act. "Like Lani, we started on the mainland. What we did were shows. Lani was very influential here in getting that started." Kai was born Aug. 15, 1936, on Oahu. His grandmother, the late Esther Paulson, was a well-known Hawaiian dance teacher in Hawaii. His mother, whose stage name was Lukia Luana, was a stand-in for Dorothy Lamour in her sarong-clothed movies. Kai was 24 when he signed for "Adventures in Paradise." He had accompanied his mother, who was interviewing for a role in the series, and a casting director offered him the part of the Tiki's crewman. "I'll always remember Lani as a creative, artistic free spirit," Strode said. Hannemann says Kai was a "misunderstood genius because he was very eccentric and independent." Kai is also survived by a brother, Lee Woodd, and half-sister, Junelehua Robertson. Kai's request that his ashes be scattered at Chun's Reef, Strode said.

Mikilani Lee-Ann "Keala" Kaina. As a teen-age leukemia patient on Maui who helped others with cancer, Mikilani Lee-Ann "Keala" Kaina received the Hawaii Youth Medal for Bravery from Gov. John Waihee in 1988. Family members say she continued to care for others despite her illness until her death March 10. She was 26. "She was a very lively person, very outgoing," said her uncle Stanceford Kaina. Mikilani, who graduated from Baldwin High School, was the cook in her family and frequently was the baby sitter for her nephews and nieces, he said. She was 15 when she was one of three youths who received a bravery medal. Friends said she showed remarkable personal bravery in her fight for life and reached out to lend moral support by talking with others who had cancer. During an interview, she said she told other cancer patients to be strong and everything would be OK. She is survived by mother Yvonne B. Kaina; father Nicholas P. Campos; brothers Zachary and Adrian Kaina; stepbrother Nicky Campos Jr. and sisters Tammy and Kimberly Kaina. Edward Keaiwohi Kalahiki, the easygoing chairman of the state Boxing Commission who cast the famous deciding vote to ban Muhammad Ali from boxing in Hawaii, died Nov. 28. He was 86. "I think he would have gone along with the match until I got involved,” said former boxing commissioner Bobby Lee. “But once he saw how it was, he voted to stop the fight.” Kalahiki and Lee made national news in 1981 when they, along with commissioner Walter Cho in a 3-2 commission count, voted to defer a decision on whether Ali could fight in Hawaii. Although the fight had been set to go, the last-minute commission vote effectively stopped the fight because it postponed the decision past Ali’s 39th birthday, making him too old to legally get a boxing license in Hawaii. The match eventually was rescheduled in Puerto Rico. Ali, who by then was on the down side of his once-brilliant career, had been matched against heavyweight boxer John Gardner. Kalahiki was first appointed to the Boxing Commission in 1973 by Gov. John Burns. Through the years, the good-humored, cigar-smoking Kalahiki reigned over the Hawaii boxing scene during some of its most colorful years, often squaring off against Hawaii’s most famous boxing promoter, Sad Sam Ichinose. Kalahiki was seen by boxing insiders as a fair, independent, “straight-down-the-middle man.” He left the commission shortly after the Ali vote, saying he was ready to retire. Kalahiki was born in Honolulu and lived in Hauula at the time of his death. He is survived by his daughters, Laverne Kauhane, Christine Brown and Edwina Hiapo; 10 grandchildren, 24 great-grandchildren; and one great-great-grandchild.
