Reginald Toru Okamura "was the glue that kept" the Hawaiian Volcano Observatory's family together, says Jack Lockwood, president of Geohazards Consultants International Inc. Okamura, a retired assistant scientist-in-charge for the Hawaiian Volcano Observatory, died Saturday Jan. 16, 1999 at Hilo Hospital. He was 62. Okamura was vice president for Geohazards Consultants. Okamura joined the observatory staff as a chemist in 1958 and remained until his retirement 32 years later. He rose to the No. 2 post where his long-term presence provided continuity for an agency where the scientist-in-charge rotates every five years. "He always kept a couch in his office," Lockwood said. Anyone with a problem, about a co-worker, a supervisor, a sick dog, could sit and talk with Okamura. "Reggie was a guy you could trust. He was the head of the family in a respected way," Lockwood said. "Reggie was the ultimate fixer. He knew who to contact to smooth things in a very Hawaiian way." Okamura was an active campaigner for Sen. Daniel Inouye, who asked him to serve on the Saddle Road Task Force. He used his many contacts in the community to see that the project went smoothly, said Mel Hewitt, co-chairman of the task force with Okamura. Okamura was born at Hilea Camp in Kau, sugar workers' housing that no longer exists, Lockwood said. In a 1987 interview with the Star-Bulletin, Okamura said he studied insects in college, intending to use the knowledge in agriculture because he wanted to remain in Hawaii. Instead, he used his college chemistry studies to get a job at the observatory in time for the most memorable event of his career, the 1,900-foot-high fountaining of Kilauea Iki in 1959. In his younger days he liked to spear-fish, said Dwight Hamilton, a former chief naturalist at Hawaii Volcanoes National Park who knew Okamura since 1961. Okamura also developed a passion for golf, belonging to four golf clubs. Just recently, Hamilton proposed a party for "Reggie and the guys." "That's the way we always thought of it, as 'Reggie and the guys,'" Hamilton said. The party was set for last Friday. On Wednesday, Okamura suffered a heart attack and remained in a coma. Hamilton and friends put on the party anyway, holding a moment of silence during it. Okamura died the next day. Okamura is survived by wife Jane; son Dean; daughter Lori Okamura; brothers Ronald and Arnold; two sisters Francine Bidal and Gail Okamura; and a granddaughter. Francis K. Ordenstein, 72, of Kailua, a fourth-generation funeral director and owner of Ordenstein's Hawaiian Memorial Park Mortuary Corp. and Ordenstein's Center for Prearranged Funeral Planning Inc., died June 29, 1999 at Kaiser Hospital. Ordenstein formerly owned Williams Funeral Services and continued to run it with the Hawaiian Memorial mortuary in Kaneohe until his retirement. The two businesses, now run by sons Kenneth and David, serve 800 to 900 families a year. Ordenstein also previously owned Windward Crematory. His great-grandfather, Manuel Enos Silva, started the family business in 1900. Ordenstein's father, Walter, wanted him to become a dentist, but Ordenstein talked him into sending him to the University of Hawaii to major in business administration. Upon graduating, he learned the business and eventually took over. "He enjoyed working with families," said his son, Kenneth. Ordenstein was an active member of the community and his profession. "He was always involved in leadership roles in the community while he was active in the business," Kenneth said. He had been a member of the state embalmers advisory board, a past president of Hawaii Funeral Directors Association, a past president of Kaneohe Business Group, a past lieutenant governor of the regional division of the Kiwanis International, a two-time president of the Kaneohe Kiwanis Club and a 35-year Legion of Honor member of the Kiwanis Club. Familiar to Kailua residents and merchants for wearing funny hats, Ordenstein would participate in the Kaneohe Christmas parade wearing reindeer antlers. He is survived by wife Anna Rose Kwai Sim; sons Kenneth W.K., Michael K., Jon J.K., and David K.; brother Harold W.; 12 grandchildren; a great-granddaughter, and hanai daughters Kim Huff, Codie King and Pauline Anakalea. Wallace I. Otsuka Jr., 56, a businessman and entrepreneur, died Monday Feb 8, 1999. He was also an executive with Otsuka's in Kapaa and Kauai Petroleum in Lihue. He was born in Honolulu. He is survived by father Wallace; wife Pamela; daughter Cherisse; and sister Jeanette. Services: 11:30 a.m. Monday at Kauai War Memorial Convention Hall, 4191 Hardy St. in Lihue.

Wallace Yuukichi Otsuka, a prominent Kauai businessman and former Hawaii legislator, wanted to be the best at his death as he had in his life, said his daughter, Jeanette Chang. After suffering from an advanced stage of throat cancer, he slipped into "eternal sleep" on Oct. 5, 1999, said Chang. He was 89. Otsuka, a Republican from Kauai, served twice in the Territorial Legislature and at one time was running three businesses simultaneously. In the 1950s, he was the No. 1 Studebaker dealer in the U.S., and the top General Electric dealer and the leading Whirlpool dealer in Hawaii. "He always told us, whatever we became, he wanted us to be the best we could," said Chang, "It wasn't a need to be No. 1. He had tremendous work ethics. Through sheer hard work, we could excel." Otsuka served from 1941-43 in the Territorial Legislature as a representative from the Garden Island. He withdrew as a candidate for re-election after World War II broke out, along with others of Japanese ancestry. But he returned to the House of Representatives from 1951-53. "He was such a staunch Republican, an entrepreneur. That was his bent as long as I've known him," said Chang, 54. Otsuka, chairman of the Republican Party on Kauai and a member of the GOP Presidential Inner-Circle, was invited to the inauguration of Presidents Nixon, Bush and Reagan in Washington, D.C. He co-founded Otsuka's Furniture and Appliance Store in Kapaa and Hanapepe on Kauai. He also ran Kauai Petroleum of Lihue, distributor of Union Oil products, and was president of Wallace Sales & Service in Honolulu. "When I was young, Oriental families normally favored their sons," Chang said. "My father cherished who I was. He sent both my brother and I to Punahou, when only 10 percent of the school was Oriental and mostly boys. I thank God for that." The legacy he left to the community was his generosity, she said. He regularly donated to baseball, bowling and soccer teams on Kauai. "It was often said if you wanted a free meal, just follow Wally Sr. to a restaurant and he would treat you," Chang said. Born the oldest of eight children in Koolau, Kauai, he is survived by his daughter Jeanette Chang; brothers Jay, Harry and Jitsuo; sisters Florence Hoshibata, Masayo Tone, Sadako Kawamoto and Eiko Watanabe; and four grandchildren. Services will be held at Kapaa Jodo Mission on Kauai at 4 p.m. Nov. 7. Casual attire is requested.

Wallace Yuukichi Otsuka, a businessman and community leader on Kauai, died Oct. 5, 1999. He was 89. Otsuka was president of Otsuka Sales & Service, a furniture and appliance store, which he and his brother, Jay, co-founded in 1938. He was also co-founder of Kauai Petroleum Co. in 1948. Both companies are still in operation. He also founded Wallace Sales and Service. Otsuka was serving as a representative to the Territorial Legislature in 1941 when war broke out. He was the last of four politicians of Japanese ancestry to resign from the Territorial House of Representatives after Pearl Harbor. He again served in 1951-1953, but declined to run again because of his wife's ill health. Otsuka headed up many community organizations, such as the Kauai Chamber of Commerce, the Kapaa Businessmen's Association, the Republican Party on Kauai and the Kauai Civic Improvements Committee. He is survived by his daughter, Jeanette Chang; brothers, Jay, Harry and Jitsuo; sisters, Florence Hoshibata, Masayo Tone, Sadako Kawamoto and Eiko Watanabe; and four grandchildren. Services will be at 4 p.m. Nov. 7 at Kapaa Jodo Mission in Kapaa. The family requests casual attire. Arrangements are by Ultimate Cremation Services of Hawaii.
