Norman Reyes, a local public relations executive, an author and a newscaster on island TV and radio, died in the Philippines Yesterday, Jan 6, 1999. He was 75. During World War II, Reyes was a lieutenant in the Philippine army when Lt. Gen. Jonathan Wainwright surrendered the country to the Japanese in May 1942. Taken prisoner, Reyes spent several months in jail before he was shipped to Japan. Before the fall of the Philippines, Reyes' radio broadcasts from Bataan brought him renown as the "Voice of Freedom." On April 9, 1942, Reyes broadcast from Corregidor that Wainwright had ordered his outnumbered, starving men to cease fighting, noting, "Bataan has fallen, but the spirit that made it stand -- a beacon to all liberty-loving peoples of the world -- cannot fall." Some of Reyes' ashes will be scattered at Corregidor, and the rest returned here for burial. Reyes spent many years as a public relations executive for First Hawaiian Bank, Hawaii Corp., the Dillingham Corp. and the state Department of Business and Economic Development. He also was a newscaster on island television and radio stations. Walter Dods, BancWest Corp.'s chairman and chief executive officer, called Reyes a "very sensitive, beautiful human being. He taught me so much. I loved him very much." Dods, who knew Reyes for 35 years, said he first met his former boss when he went to work for Dillingham. "He gave me my first real training," Dods said. In 1995, Reyes authored a book, "Child of Two Worlds," about growing up in the Philippines the son of a Filipino father and a Brooklyn-born Caucasian mother. "My life has been enriched by the lessons and burdens of having two simultaneous cultures," Reyes wrote. "And I enjoy the wisdom of sometimes looking at my Asian self through my Western eyes and my Western self through my Asian eyes. There are times when a bicultural person is not totally at home in either of the two cultures involved, and that is the lonely aspect of the immigrant experience." Peter J. Britos, 63, of Acworth, Ga., a retired lieutenant colonel in the U.S. Air Force, died Sunday at home. He was born in Hawaii. Anna H. Ritte challenged the legal authority of Maui County to dictate building codes on Hawaiian homestead land and won. Ritte, 73, of Molokai died April 10, 1999. Her family built a "Hawaiian" house about 10 years ago, but was found guilty of building without permits in Maui Circuit Court. But she appealed her conviction to the state Supreme Court, where the county agreed to dismiss the complaints. County attorneys say the county hasn't tried to enforce the code since then. The house still stands on a hill at Hoolehua overlooking the ocean. She was the mother of Walter Ritte, who protested the U.S. Navy practice bombing of Kahoolawe in the mid-1970s. A gathering of friends
