MELVIN AH NEN "SONNY" AKIONA, 86, of Waimanalo, died Aug. 15, 2000. Shoppers were able to get more than staples at Mel’s Market in Waimanalo, thanks to one of the owners, Melvin Ah Nen "Sonny" Akiona, who died Aug. 15. "He was Mr. Aloha of Mel’s Market," said daughter Sharon Bolmeier, of Oregon. "On New Year’s Day, we would have a luau, and he would bring home strangers who happened to stop by the store. He wanted people to experience the culture of the islands." But Akiona didn’t work in the store full time. He worked in the construction field as a heavy equipment operator for his uncle, Moses Akiona. nHe later worked for Grace Brothers, but returned to his uncle’s business, where he worked until he retired at about 70 years old. "I look at my parents and what they did for a living, and I can see the history of the island," Bolmeier said. As a heavy equipment operator, Akiona helped build many roads and projects, including the hairpin turn on Pali Highway, she said. Akiona’s wife, Mary, ran Mel’s Market, which they opened after moving to Waimanalo 47 years ago. They formed a partnership with Mary’s sister and her husband, Emily and Walter Jones. When Mel retired from the store at 80, he sold his interest in the store to his sister-in-law. Today Gail Jones, his 44-year-old niece, runs the store with her brother, Greg. Jones, who joined the business 20 years ago, said Akiona was the butcher and would come into the store after work and on weekends.

Her earliest memories of him was when he took his wife dancing after spending the day working in the hot sun and evenings at the store. "I couldn't believe they could still go ballroom dancing," Jones said. Bolmeier said she remembers that her parents would return home at 4 a.m. after a night of dancing and get up to go to work that morning. He worked seven days a week, she said. Once Akiona retired from construction, he kept busy fixing old automobiles. He loved to buy Mustangs and restore them. Long-time Mel's Market employee Susie Kamalani, 67, said Akiona was a big-hearted man who loved to talk to everyone. Born in Ke'anae, Maui, Akiona was adopted by his Hawaiian grandmother after his mother died. His father, Ching Hung Young, had taken part of the family back to China and the rest stayed here. Akiona learned to speak Hawaiian from his grandmother, and whenever Hawaiians came into the Waimanalo store he would greet and talk to them in their language. Employee Darcy Takeifanga, who had worked at the store for 20 years, said she missed Akiona when he finally retired. He was a practical joker, and he cooked lunch for us, she said, and everyone in Waimanalo knew him. "Whether it was here or in construction, he touched a lot of people's lives," Takeifanga said. Besides Bolmeier, Akiona is survived by sons, Bryan "Mugs" and Curtis; sisters, Helen Nakanelua, Eunice Pea and Rachel Wong; four grandchildren and one great-grandson. Visitation will be from 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Saturday at Borthwick Mortuary; service 11 a.m. Burial will be at 2 p.m. at Hawaiian Memorial Park.

Marvin J. Anderson had retired from a teaching career at the University of California's Hastings College of Law when he arrived in Hawaii in 1982 at the age of 67.

Between that year and his departure from the Islands in 1989, Anderson would have a couple more "retirements," but not before leaving a lasting impression at the University of Hawaii, where he was a law school dean and later chancellor. He later went on to become president of the former Hawai'i Loa College. "He kept retiring, and they kept bringing him back to do more things," said Anderson's son, Ted. "He never could turn down a challenge." Marvin J. Anderson died Oct. 18, 2000 in Bend, Ore. He was 85. His Parkinson's disease had worsened, and he died after being hospitalized for a fall and a broken hip, his son said. Anderson began his teaching career as an assistant to the dean and associate professor of law at California Western University before going to the University of California's Hastings College of Law, where he was a professor and dean.

In 1982, Anderson lent his expertise to the University of Hawai'i. Under his direction, the William S. Richardson School of Law built a new classroom and library, and received full accreditation, his son said. He later became chancellor. Anderson in 1986 turned his attention to the former Hawai'i Loa College as president. A state Senate proclamation subsequently honored Anderson, noting, "Under his leadership, Hawai'i Loa survived ... accreditation was restored, and its major debts have been retired." Anderson also is survived by his wife, Eda Bach Anderson; a sister, Louise Hartley; a second son, Tom; six grandchildren and two great grandchildren. Remembrances may be made in the form of contributions to the University of Hawai'i Foundation/Marvin J. Anderson Memorial Scholarship to benefit students of the William S. Richardson School of Law.

Joseph I. Arakaki. Two words can best describe Joseph I. Arakaki, retired nighttime editor for the Honolulu Star-Bulletin. Loyalty. Golf. Arakaki, 74, who worked for the paper from 1953 to 1988, died Aug. 25, 2000 at Castle Medical Center. "He never missed a day of work, even when he was sick," said reporter Helen Altonn, who was working at the Bulletin when Arakaki joined the Honolulu desk from the Kauai bureau, in 1964. "I guess I would just have to say that he was a fine newsman," Altonn said. But outside the newsroom, Arakaki's life was golf, she said. Arakaki himself recently speculated that in the past 50 years, he had played more than 6,000 rounds of golf -- about once every three days. "I think he lived for golf," Altonn said. Arakaki, born in Kekaha, Kauai, on Dec. 19, 1925, served for three years in the Military Intelligence Service at the end of World War II, including a year of interrogating Japanese nationals being repatriated to Japan from Manchuria, China. He later graduated from the University of Hawaii in 1951 with a major in chemistry and a minor in math. Having no luck finding work as a chemist, Arakaki joined the Bulletin as a part-time correspondent for kicks, planning to stay for a year or two. He'd never written a story before. He quickly proved to be an extremely productive writer. Less than year later, in 1954, Arakaki became the paper's first neighbor island bureau chief, based on Kauai, and ran the desk for the next decade. Arakaki transferred to Honolulu as a nighttime general assignment reporter following a restructuring of Kauai's coverage. He became night editor in 1975. "He was a feisty guy, a good guy," said Trini Peltier, who has worked at the paper for 45 years.

Altonn praised Arakaki's attention to detail in stories. Precision also paid off on the golf course. At one point, he had a 5-stroke handicap, nearly the best an amateur golfer can have. "I'm sure that he was golfing right up to the end," Altonn said. Arakaki is survived by sister Marjorie Habu and brothers Larry Y., Charles T. and Carl T. Arakaki. Services were private.

"PAPA" HENRY ALLEN AUWAE, 94, of Hilo, Hawai'i, a noted Hawaiian herbal healer, died Dec. 31, 2000. Born in Kokoiki, Kohala, Hawai'i. Auwae, who lived in Hilo's Hawaiian community of Keaukaha for 55 years, died at North Hawai'i Community Hospital in Waimea on New Year's Eve. He had been living with his son, Ronald, in Waikoloa in recent years. Auwae was widely recognized for his postretirement pursuit of herbal remedies, winning recognition as a "living treasure" from the Honpa Hongwanji Buddhist Temple of Honolulu and the National Cancer Institute.

He was associated with holistic healing programs at North Hawai'i Hospital, where complementary medicine is encouraged for patients who want to have spiritual and cultural healing techniques used in addition to Western treatment. He gained his nickname as the father of 18 and grandfather and great-grandfather of 265 and had two careers. He was a heavy equipment operator for the Army and later served as superintendent of heavy equipment at K-lani Prison on the Big Island. He traced his healing skills to being trained from the age of 7 by a great-great grandmother, Kapua Pai, who lived beyond 100 at Kawaihae. Auwae never charged for his advice or his herbs, admirers said, because Pai instructed him to share with everyone. Auwae was born in Kokoiki, North Kohala, on Feb. 1, 1906. He is survived by seven sons, Ronald of Waikoloa; Henry of Sacramento, Calif.; Mark of Freeport, Texas; Allen of Portland, Ore.; Duane of Hilo; Anthony of Montana; and Charles of Waikoloa. William "Bill" Kusuo Azeka, developer of Azeka Place Shopping Center, died Wednesday June 14, 2000. He was 79. Azeka described himself as a "butcher by trade" who sold a lot of barbecued ribs with his special sauce -- 3,000 pounds during one Christmas Eve. The community knew Azeka for his generosity and grace. In the 1950s, when the economy was depressed in south Maui, he sometimes allowed people to trade fish for groceries. He also gave families food on credit and kept a record of their debt by taping their grocery receipts to the cash register. For the past 10 years, the Kihei Community Association has been using free office space at one of the Azeka buildings. "One of the reasons we have been a powerful community association has been because of the tremendous support we got from the Azekas," said association board member Daryl Davis. Gene Thompson, past president of the Kihei Community Association, said Azeka was also sensitive to issues of growth and would discuss building plans with association members before moving forward with any development. "He was a very charming man, warm and nice. Everybody liked him," Thompson said. Azeka learned about business through his family, working in his grandmother's store in Japan, then later at his parents' restaurant in Kahului. He built a store in 1950 on the family's farm land, now a portion of the shopping center, and later purchased two 10-acre parcels in Kihei. Azeka turned over most of the management of the business to his son, Tyler, in 1994. He is survived by his wife Jane; son Tyler; daughters Emilie Preston and Audrey Inaba; brothers Kenji and Joseph; and sister, Jane Tsukazaki. The family will begin receiving visitors at noon Sunday at Nakamura's Mortuary in Wailuku, followed by services at 1 p.m. and a reception. Casual attire is requested.
