In 37 years with Amfac, Ednie made "significant contributions and was a very valuable part of the team that expanded Amfac dramatically in the 1960s," said Jim Boersema, a community relations spokesman at Amfac. Ednie joined Amfac in 1934 as an auditor and certified public accountant after earlier employment for two years with the Honolulu firm of Cameron and Johnston. His earlier education was at Morgan Academy, Dundee, Scotland, and in night courses at the University of St. Andrews and Dundee Technical College there. His first professional job was an indentureship to a chartered accountant in Scotland at the equivalent of $25 a year. Arriving in Hawaii in 1931, he drew on his background in Scotland, where his father was in the general farm supply business and set his sights on Hawaii's agricultural economy. He eventually joined Amfac and rose through various positions to become plantation division manager in 1952 and Amfac vice president of finance and development shortly after. He was named an Amfac senior vice president and director in 1962. He also held directorships in a number of other firms, retiring in 1971.
