Aloha Kaeo, former supervisor of the city's lifeguard services, died Monday in Honolulu. He was 86. Kaeo was born and raised in Waikiki and like most youngsters, he spent all of his spare time in the water. The pure Hawaiian learned to swim at a young age when someone threw him off a bridge. A 1930 graduate of McKinley High School, Kaeo worked as a crane operator. In 1956, he was hired as a lifeguard by Bill Smith, an Olympic gold medalist who headed the department. In 1967, Kaeo was promoted to supervisor of the lifeguards, a position he held until his retirement in 1983. During his tenure, Kaeo was credited with developing a strict training regiment for lifeguards. He also hired the city's first female lifeguard. Ocean Safety and Lifeguard Services administrator Ralph Goto said that there was no doubt who was the boss when Kaeo was in charge. "He was the man," said Goto, who joined the division two years before Kaeo retired. "Most of the guys who were around him have since retired. But their recollections of him are that he was very strict, but very fair. He was a great man." Ralph Crommett worked as a lifeguard under Kaeo from 1970 until 1974 and he described Kaeo as a "great water man" who cared about people. "I can't even tell you how many people I've rescued out of the context of being a lifeguard at a beach," Crommett said. "I'm talking about all around the world, and it's all because of the training I got from him." Kaeo is survived by his wife, Pauline; and nieces and nephews. Memorial services will be held at 8 a.m. Saturday at Duke's fronting the Outrigger Hotel in Waikiki. Scattering of ashes from a catamaran off Waikiki Beach will be at 9 a.m.

Joseph Kepa "Stew" Kalama, one of Hawai'i's most respected outrigger canoe paddling coaches, died of a stroke Monday. He was 79. Kalama, who lived in Enchanted Lake, coached the Kai Oni Canoe Club for 43 years. He was a founder of Hui Wa'a & Surfing Association and instrumental in establishing new canoe clubs on O'ahu, Maui and Kaua'i. He helped build and pay for 22 fiberglass canoes for the new clubs.

When he started coaching in 1953, there was one canoe club in Windward O'ahu. Today there are at least 14. Many of Hawai'i's present coaches learned from Kalama.

A tour driver until he retired in 1980, he coached his paddlers every day from 1953 until he suffered his first stroke in 1994. He was born Oct. 5, 1920, on the Wai'anae coast of O'ahu and raised by his grandparents at Honokua, Kona, on the Big Island. His grandfather Joseph Paauhau and uncle Charles Mokuohai built fishing canoes on the Kona Coast. Later in life, Kalama built two koa racing canoes. Kalama joined the Army at age 16 and served through World War II until 1945. He drove a school bus, then turned to tour driving, dancing and singing for his passengers. In return, they sent him photos, letters and Christmas cards. After he retired in 1980, his home became a mecca for school classes studying Hawaiian culture. He taught students about canoe building, how to make crab nets, and put them to work in his taro patch. Fluent in Hawaiian, he was frequently host to students in Hawaiian immersion classes. He is survived by his wife, Shirleyann; sons, Joseph Jr. and David; stepsons, Walton and Howell "Chinky" Mahoe; daughters Duane, Kehau, Nohea and Pua; also 22 grandchildren and 28 great-grandchildren.

Alice Chang Kamaka dies. The nurses at Kalaupapa made a concerted effort to get Alice Chang Kamaka into a movie filmed there two years ago. The staff of the state Hansen's disease hospital in the Molokai community knew the aged and frail woman had a historical link to the subject, Father Damien DeVeuster. "In the hospital scene, they had a full shot of her. That was all I wanted to see," said nurse's aide Frances Padeken. "She was the spirit of this place. She never gave up." Kamaka, 94, died Monday July 24, 2000 in Hale Mohalu in Honolulu. Diagnosed with leprosy as a teenager, Kamaka was one of thousands of island residents who was sent to the remote peninsula in an effort to curb the spread of the disease. She had lived at Kalaupapa since 1919, longer than anyone else now alive. She and other patients have lived there by choice since the quarantine was lifted in the 1960s. When Kamaka arrived, Brother Joseph Dutton was still caring for patients. Dutton had worked with Father Damien, known around the world for his 16 years of service at the settlement. The priest, who contracted the disease and died in 1889, was beatified by the Catholic Church in 1995. "She was very witty, she says what she wants to say," said Kalaupapa head nurse Fe Austria-Schwind. "She was happy-go-lucky, nothing bothers her." Kamaka, married five times, bore the name of her latest spouse, who died in the 1950s. She was a retired state worker, having served as a hospital orderly for several years. "She just loved life, she lived it her way," Padeken said. "She was ahead of her time. From the stories, she was hell on wheels, my kind of lady." Kamaka's niece, Gladys Lopes of Oahu, said, "She liked to sing, liked to dance, liked to drink beer. She would sing while my mother played ukulele. She was really kolohe (a rascal)." She outlived 12 siblings. More than 30 years ago, she bought a cemetery plot and paid for her own funeral arrangements, Lopes said. Services will be at 1 p.m. Saturday at Hawaiian Memorial Park Mortuary. The Belgian movie in which she appeared as an extra, "Molokai, the Story of Father Damien," is currently being shown on Molokai and is slated to run on other islands.

Dr. George Hueu Sanford Kanahale: Promotion of Hawaiian cultural values or "Hawaiianess" at Waikiki hotels and other tourist destinations statewide has a common thread, in that noted consultant Dr. George Hueu Sanford Kanahale probably had a hand in it. "If you look behind anything that's basically in motion in the hospitality industry, he's woven into the fabric of it," said Maile Meyer, a director at the Native Hawaiian Tourism and Hospitality Association. "His legacy is everywhere, absolutely everywhere in Waikiki. He was just so enthusiastic about the place up until the last minute," she said. Kanahale, 69, died Thursday night on Guam after suffering a heart attack, said his son, George Kanahale Jr. Kanahale, a historian who published several books and papers on Hawaiian values, Waikiki and Queen Emma, was on Guam sharing his work with the Chamorro people. He was also the editor of "Hawaiian Music and Musicians," a 1979 publication that is being updated. George Kanahale Jr. said his father was a workaholic, always immersed in projects. He said time was of the essence because there was a long list of things his father wanted to do. "He was fond about all the islands, but Waikiki was one of his projects that he was consumed with," his son said. "I think he wanted to bring some aloha back to the islands, and try to make Waikiki more of where you could feel that old Hawaii." Still, he always made time for father-son activities.

"We went skydiving together last week," George Jr. said. "We jumped out of a plane together at 12,000 feet. That was a nice father-and-son little outing we had."

Kanahale's brother, Albert, said the family of 14 siblings grew up in Laie and Kaneohe. Kanahale graduated from Kamehameha Schools before earning a bachelor's degree at Brigham Young University in Provo and a doctorate in political science from Cornell University. George Kanahale worked in the private and public sector in Hawaii before he focused on his consulting business. Albert Kanahale said his brother was a serious scholar who didn't take himself seriously and had a unique sense of humor. "He was kolohe in a good way," he said. Lori Sablas, vice president and director of po'okela or cultural programs at the Kaanapali Beach Hotel, said the hotel's entire cultural program that began in 1986 is based on Kanahale's work. Kanahale was one of the founders of the Native Hawaiian Tourism and Hospitality Association in 1997, and was an honorary director. He was president of the WAIAHA Foundation, a nonprofit group created to promote traditional Hawaiian values in the hospitality industry. Kanahale recently served as a cultural adviser to writers of "Baywatch Hawaii." Services are being arranged by Borthwick Mortuary and will be held on Oahu. His survivors include wife, Jean; son, George Jr.; daughters Kauana Jackson and Joanna Kanahale; brother Albert; and four grandchildren.

Dr. Melvyn Matsuo Kaneshiro, known as a good friend to his patients, died July 8. He was 62. "He was known for being a caring doctor and for his devotion to Kuakini Health Systems and Medical Center," said his son, Dr. Steven Kaneshiro, an orthopedic surgeon at Kuakini. He said his father inspired him in part to become a doctor.

"The main thing that really impressed me was how much he cared for his patients," the son said. Born May 10, 1938, in Honolulu, Kaneshiro graduated from Roosevelt High School and received his undergraduate and medical degrees from Tulane University in New Orleans. He served in the Army at Tripler Army Medical Center and was honorably discharged two years later as a major. He established a private practice in internal medicine and hematology at Kalihi Medical Center until it closed, then moved to Kuakini Medical Plaza. He was an associate professor of medicine at the University of Hawai'i.

At Kuakini, he served on the board of directors and held positions as Kuakini Health Systems trustee, chief of staff and chief of medicine. He served as vice-chairman of the state Board of Medical Examiners. Dr. Gary Kajiwara, president and CEO of Kuakini Health Systems, recalled that Kaneshiro "always had some funny story to relate to people. I know the patients will feel it a lot in terms of missing him."

Frank E. Keifer, a veteran Hawaii hospital official, died Feb. 7, 2000 in Sonoma, Calif., where he had lived since 1981. He was 79. Keifer worked in hospitals on Molokai, Kauai, the Big Island and Oahu during his 25 years in Hawaii. He served as administrator of Molokai Hospital and Kauai Veterans Memorial Hospital before becoming president and executive director of the Hospital Association of Hawaii.

Keifer then accepted the position of administrator at Hilo Hospital, and served concurrently as administrative director of the Hawaii County Hospital System, with Hilo satellite hospitals in Honokaa, Kohala, Kona and Kau. "He tried to improve the hospital situation in Hawaii," said Dr. Paul Stevens, practicing medicine on Molokai since 1959. "When he first came to Molokai he had two goals, to build a new hospital and to have it accredited. He accomplished both goals."

Stevens remembers Keifer as a friendly, outgoing person "liked by everyone who knew him." He retired from the Hawaii County Hospital System in 1975 after working for nine years because of his desire for "new challenges in a new environment," he said at the time. Keifer said of his tenure on the Big Island, "I believe that I have made some major improvements of the facilities of the Hawaii County Hospital System and laid the groundwork for future changes and improvements."

During his career on the Big Island, a hospital was constructed in Kau in 1971 to replace a plantation-operated infirmary, and a $4.3 million hospital was built in Kona. Two years following his retirement from the Big Island, Keifer became administrator of the Hawaii State Hospital in Kaneohe, succeeding Lee Wheeler.

During his administrative career, he served on numerous professional organizations and advisory boards. He was director of the Health Facilities Planning Council of Hawaii, a board trustee of the Hospital Association of Hawaii, and a delegate to the House of Delegates of the American Hospital Association. He was also a member of the advisory committee to the University of Hawaii Health Manpower Planning Project, and chairman of the Advisory Committee to the Hilo Community College Associate Degree Nursing School. He was also a member of the Governor's Commission on Mental Health and Criminal Justice, and a member of the American College of Hospital Administrators.

H. Baird Kidwell, a former associate justice of the Hawai'i Supreme Court and prominent Honolulu attorney, died Dec. 26, 2000 in Medford, Ore. He was 89. Kidwell was born in Maricopa, Calif., Oct. 20, 1911, and he attended Stanford University for undergraduate studies and law school. He earned his law degree in 1935 and worked for the Los Angeles firm of O'Melveny and Myers. In 1938, Kidwell joined the law firm now known as Goodsill Anderson Quinn & Stifel. He practiced a variety of business, real estate, trust and banking law for most of the next 37 years.

Kidwell married the former Margaret Greenwell in 1940 and the couple had two children. Although his career took much of his time, he devoted a good portion of his life to his family. In 1966, the Chamber of Commerce of Honolulu named Kidwell as its Father of the Year in the field of law. During World War II, Kidwell served as a deputy attorney general at the request of Attorney General J. Garner Anthony. In his 17 months with the department, Kidwell drafted legal documents that were required for the return of Hawai'i from military to civilian government.

Kidwell returned to his law firm and in 1975 was picked by then-Gov. George Ariyoshi to serve on the state Supreme Court. Kidwell served as an associate justice until 1979, when he retired.

He remained active in community activities and taught at the University of Hawaii's William Richardson School of Law. Kidwell served as president of the Hawaii Bar Association, was on the board of governors of the American Bar Association, and worked with the Honolulu Symphony and the Oahu Development Conference. Former law partner Marshall Goodsill described Kidwell as a "practical intellectual." "He had a brilliant, searching mind," Goodsill said. No client ever got into trouble by listening to his advice. He was the most ethical lawyer I ever knew." Kidwell is survived by his wife, Margaret; son, Alan; daughter, Frances; three grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. No services are planned.

William "Bill" Klopp, 71, who flew 40 missions in the Korean War and later served as longtime general aviation officer with the Airports Division of the state Department of Transportation, died Tuesday May 18, 2000. The San Francisco-born aviator was assigned to Hickam Air Force Base after his Korea service, and he and wife Dorothy decided to make Hawaii their home. "Almost everything about him was outstanding as far as I'm concerned," Dorothy Klopp said, noting their marriage lasted 49 years. "He was a very special man." He flew four-engine C-54 transports in Korea in psychological warfare operations, dropping propaganda leaflets from the aircraft behind enemy lines. The Air Force chose to move his squadron from Hickam to Maine in the 1950s. "We decided we didn't want to do that, so we got out of the Air Force," his wife said. "He worked downtown for a few years, and then he was general aviation officer for the Airports Division." A 1966 Star-Bulletin story said Klopp was chosen as the state's first general aviation officer out of a field of 24 applicants. He retired from the post in 1990. He was a member of Aloha Flight Daedalians and the Hawaii Yacht Club. He also is survived by son Jim; stepbrother George; niece Jackie Halstead-Bothell; four grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Although no formal services are planned, friends will assist in scattering his ashes next week, probably Wednesday, over the ocean from the air, his wife said. "He's a pilot, and they're all pilots, and they're going to see that he goes west, as they say, in fine shape," she said. Donations may be made to the Hawaiian Humane Society.

Leonard Keala Kwan Sr., one of Hawaiʻi's most influential slack key guitarists, died yesterday. He was 69. Family members described Kwan as a quiet man who revealed his gentle personality through his music. "He loved music. He loved Hawaiian music," said Kwan's youngest son, KevinLee Kwan. "Any time our family was together, Dad would play." Born in Honolulu in 1931, Kwan made his first recording in 1957, a track entitled "Hawaiian Chimes," which featured an innovative use of chime-like harmonics. In 1960, Kwan recorded the first-ever all-instrumental slack key album, "Slack Key," for the Tradewinds record label. It included his best known and now standard piece, "Opihi Moe Moe." His second album, "The Old Way," was released in 1974. Kwan became the first slack key guitarist to publicly share his instrument tunings when he compiled the first-ever slack key guitar instruction book. His passion for music was passed on and shared with his sons, who "play a little of everything," KevinLee said. About 10 years ago, Kwan, KevinLee and Kwan's oldest son, Leonard Kwan Jr., played together at the Big Island's Slack Key Festival, where Kwan was later honored. "His music is so soothing, it's mind relaxing," said KevinLee. "For my dad, the slack key music that he played came from his soul; it's real peaceful." Kwan released his fourth album, "Keala's Mele" in 1995 for George Winston's Dancing Cat Records. Kwan's Hawaiian name, Keala, means sweet, which was the essence of his music, said Ben Churchill, Dancing Cat Records' vice president of marketing. "His style was unique to others," Churchill said. "Few people played like he did: sweet, smooth and gentle - the same kind of man he was." Kwan also played music the way he liked it, even if times were changing around him. "Leonard came from an older tradition," Churchill said. "He never really tried to get fancy and incorporate new things like all the others. He kept true to the way he was taught to play."

Most recently, Kwan performed in a duet with Ledward Kaapana on Kaapana's, "Black Sand" CD. Kwan also sang and played guitar for a children's choir performing "We Wish You a Merry Christmas" on the album "Slack Key Christmas" to be released in late September. Dancing Cat Records has enough tracks by Kwan to make two albums, but producer and musician George Winston will comb through them to make a big compilation album of Kwan's songs, Churchill said. KevinLee said his family always listened to Kwan's music, but they will now hear it with new emotions. "Truthfully, listening to him now will be a tough one," KevinLee said. "Now that he's not here, there's more meaning behind his music. "I'm missing him already; I miss his smile and his voice." Kwan also is survived by another son, Kenneth, and seven grandchildren.
