Thomas "Tom" Matsuda . Funeral for Thomas "Tom" Matsuda, an executive sous chef at the Sheraton Waikiki Hotel who was stabbed to death Dec. 1, will be Sunday at noon at Hosoi Garden Mortuary. He was 49. Matsuda was stabbed with a kitchen knife following an argument with a cook. Police said the dispute was over a work schedule.

Sheraton cook Tam Van Huynh, 39, has been indicted by the O‘ahu grand jury on a charge of second-degree murder in connection with the stabbing. Huynh is being held in lieu of $100,000 bond. Matsuda was born in Japan while his father was with the U.S. Army. The family moved to Hawai‘i when Matsuda was 4 years old. After graduating from Kaimuki High School, Matsuda began to pursue his dream as a cook when he was hired at Flamingo Cafe. He attended Leeward and Kapi‘olani community colleges while pursuing his career in culinary arts. Matsuda began his 22-year career with Sheraton in 1978 as a fry cook. He moved up the ranks to dinner cook, second cook, executive sous chef and then senior executive sous chef. Co-workers described Matsuda as a caring boss, occasional surfer and devoted family man. He earned manager of the year honors at Sheraton in 1996. Family lawyer David Minkin said Matsuda’s family remains shocked and devastated by the incident. But Minkin said the family appreciates the outpouring of support from the community. "It's tough, really tough. There’s a huge void in their lives," Minkin said. Matsuda is survived by his wife, Colleen; sons, Warren and Ian; daughter, Julia; mother, Tomiko; brother, Miles; and sisters, Mary Kunimitsu, Amy Hahn-Marcos and Nancy Nakasone. In addition to the Sunday service, a celebration of life will be held at the Sheraton Waikiki, Kohala-Kona Room from 11:30 a.m.-1:30 p.m. Monday. A scattering of ashes will follow. Starwood Hotels & Resorts Hawaii, which operates Sheraton Hotels here, has set up a memorial fund to benefit Matsuda’s wife and children.

Sister Anna McAnany's devotion to peace and human rights put her in a noisy crowd protesting President Ronald Reagan's Central American policies when he visited Honolulu. It put her in Waianae classrooms teaching that peace is as personal as resolution of rifts in families and relationships and as global as nuclear disarmament.

McAnany died July 30 in Maryknoll, N.Y. at the age of 92. She had been a member of the Maryknoll religious order for 72 years. She left Hawaii in 1995 after more than 60 years in the islands. The diminutive nun, known then as Sister Francis Regis, taught for 40 years in island Catholic schools. After gaining an advanced degree at Notre Dame University, she began a new direction of outreach and activism. She helped organize the Citizens Against Nuclear Armament and spoke out against the Vietnam War and the proliferation of nuclear weaponry. "She was a very committed person. When she saw something that had to be done, she went and did it," said Sister Marie Rosso. "She was convinced that Waianae was where she had to be," Rosso said. That was the beginning of McAnany's involvement with the Waianae Women's Support Group. It led to their creation of a peace education program, a two-week course launched on the Leeward Coast. McAnany eventually taught in other high schools. A University of Hawaii summer course was created to prepare teachers with the curriculum. She attended the 1984 Nuclear Freeze Global Conference in Japan, and she joined non-violent protests against military target bombing in Makua Valley and Kahoolawe. "Sister Anna was small, like a pebble of sand, and strong like a mountain," said Gigi Cocquio, creator of Hoa Aina O Makaha, an educational farm in Makaha where a building is named in her honor.

Dr. Norman Meller, University of Hawaii emeritus professor of political science who specialized in islands of the Pacific under the American flag and related topics, died Wednesday in Straub Hospital. He was 86. The San Francisco native earned a law degree at Hastings Law School. His education also included a bachelor's degree from the University of California-Berkeley, and a master's and Ph.D. from the University of Chicago. His University of Hawaii affiliation ran from 1947 to 1977. He was director of the Legislative Reference Bureau in 1947-1955 and held the title of UH political science professor from 1955 to 1977, serving a few years as department chairman. Also, he was briefly acting deputy chancellor of the East-West Center. His earlier career included service as a deputy from 1938 to 1946 with the California Department of Legislative Counsel, with time out for World War II Navy service as a Japanese language officer from 1943 to 1945. His strong attachment to the Pacific led to visiting professorships in Australia, Canada, Japan and the U.S. mainland. He had numerous consultantships, including one with the U.S. Senate Committee to American Samoa in 1960 and another with the Micronesian Constitutional Convention in 1975. He published eight books and scholarly monographs, 10 chapters in edited books and 25 articles in learned journals. Titles included "Land and Politics in Hawaii," "Fiji Goes to the Polls," "Papers on the Papua-New Guinea House of Assembly," "The Congress of Micronesia," "Constitution Making in Hawaii," and "Institutionalized Adaptability: Legislative Reference in Japan and the United States." Adam A. "Bud" Smyser, longtime acquaintance and Star-Bulletin contributing editor, recalled he first met Meller as Legislative Reference Bureau director here after World War II. "He ran a good ship," Smyser said. "He was an outstanding, totally intellectually honest professor of political science at the University of Hawaii. He helped train I'm sure many of today's political leaders of Hawaii."

Meller is survived by wife Terza; son Douglas; sisters Ruth Hurshman and Marcia Childress; and two grandchildren. Private services were held. Donations may be made to the Norman Meller Scholarship Award, University of Hawaii Foundation, c/o Department of Political Science, 2424 Maile Way, Room 640, Honolulu 96822.

Osayo Miura, the former owner of the H. Miura Store & Tailor Shop in Hale‘iwa, died Nov. 9, 2000. She was 97. Miura was born in Kapa‘a, Kaua‘i, and learned to sew when she was 14. Six years later she married the son of Fusakichi Miura, who founded the Hale‘iwa store in 1918. The shop specialized in hand-sewn clothes, such as suits to order, and was one of the first retail businesses in Hale‘iwa. Osayo Miura began running the business in the 1930s while raising eight children. During World War II, Miura opened a store in Wahiawa and created military uniforms. Although that store did well, the primary operation was the tailor shop in Hale‘iwa. Over the years, the store has evolved and now caters to the surfing crowd. But most of the clothing is still made at the shop.

Miura retired in 1968, but continued to work at the store until 1988. Her daughter, Jane Oda, has operated the store for the past 32 years. Oda credited the success of the store to her family’s dedication. "I’m the third generation and I’m trying to get my son, the fourth generation, involved and he’s doing tailoring also," she said. Miura is survived by her son, James; daughters, Katherine Kawaguchi, Irene Iwasa, Peggy Kalili, Jane Oda and Grace Yamada; brother, James Yoshimura; sister, Betty Yoshimura; 25 grandchildren; and 42 great-grandchildren.
