Kamesuke Nakamura played a key role in the construction of the Hawaii Okinawa Center. Honolulu attorney Ed Kuba, who headed the center's fundraising committee, said Nakamura challenged committee members to build the cultural center immediately. "Nothing was done over the years," said Kuba. Soon after meeting with Nakamura in Okinawa, Kuba and other committee members collaborated to build the center. Because of Nakamura's tenacity, construction on the center started in 1989 and was completed a year later. Nakamura, major contributor of the Hawaii Okinawa Center, died on

Feb. 26, 2002 in Okinawa. He was 99. Nakamura was born on April 24, 1902, in Naha City. He came to Hawaii in 1919 and opened Beach Home Laundry in Kailua. After World War II, Nakamura returned to Okinawa with his wife, Ayako, and opened Aloha Laundry, where he laundered clothing for the military. Nakamura was one of the founders of the Hawaii Kenjin Rengo Kai, which helped with the war relief effort in Okinawa. Nakamura believed the Hawaii Okinawa Center was ideal to perpetuate Okinawa's culture in Hawaii and to serve as bridge between the two islands. About $9 million was raised in Hawaii and Okinawa to build the cultural center, Kuba said. Nakamura contributed $150,000 to help build the center, Kuba said. Other donors followed after Nakamura's contribution. He was a kind and generous man, Kuba added. Stanley Takamine, former chairman of the Hawaii Okinawa Bunka Kaikan Committee, said Nakamura was a warm, compassionate person who looked out for the well-being of others. "He always made sure I was comfortable," said Takamine, who frequently visited Okinawa to help raise funds for the cultural center. Nakamura is survived by wife Ayako; sons George and David; daughters Joyce Terada, Doris Nakamura, Rachel Tomita and Marion Sue Jueterbock; 17 grandchildren; 27 great-grandchildren; and three great-great grandchildren. Police Capt. Alvin Nishimura, whose battle with leukemia rallied the community and prompted many to register as bone marrow donors, died yesterday Feb 4, 2002 morning at The Queen's Medical Center. He was 52. Nishimura, a 29-year veteran of the department, was diagnosed with leukemia in October 1999. He died from pneumonia, a complication from his illness, said friend and Assistant Police Chief Boisse Correa. "He went very peacefully, with his wife at his side," Correa said. "He fought right up to the end. He was a true warrior." In March 2000, Nishimura's friends and family held a fund-raiser to help pay his medical bills. In conjunction with the event, 256 people signed on to the Hawaii Bone Marrow Donor Registry. Strangers sent get-well cards and prayed for Nishimura's recovery. His wife, Cynthia Yip, slept with a surgical mask so she could comfort him during his stays in a germ-free isolation room. "Cynthia was great," Correa said. "She stayed by his side, fed him, slept with him. She was an angel." In May 2000, Nishimura underwent a bone marrow transplant. After suffering a relapse in October, he traveled to Houston for treatment. Nishimura joined the police force in April 1972, earned the rank of captain in February 1997 and headed the Criminal Intelligence Unit in June 1998. John Norris - Bandleader and cornetist John Norris, who delighted Hawai'i fans with his Dixieland music for more than four decades, died Friday June 21, 2002. He was 85. Norris was trained in classical music, played cello for the Honolulu Symphony, taught music in public schools and once studied conducting with Leonard Bernstein. But his true love was playing lively Dixieland jazz that could keep listeners smiling and dancing all night. "He just had a talent for making people feel good with his music," said singer

Jimmy Borges, who worked alongside Norris in Waikiki for years. Sydette Sakauye Stanton, who sang for Norris' New Orleans Jazz Band of Hawai'i for nearly 15 years, said Norris had an ability that went beyond music. "He had a unique blend of compassion and humor that could make everyone feel like his best friend — he had thousands of them," she said. Norris came to Hawai'i in 1959 as a Navy bandmaster stationed at Pearl Harbor. When local bandleader Trummy Young needed a cornetist, he got special permission from the musicians' union to let Norris join his band at Hilton Hawaiian Village. After that, Norris never stop-ped entertaining visitors and friends with his enthusiastic music, quick-witted humor and energetic approach to life, said his daughter Kathleen Norris. His seven-piece band played to thousands of local fans throughout Waikiki and the Neighbor Islands. At one point, it was the longest-running act in Waikiki, performing for more than 20 years at the Hilton's garden bar. Norris retired in 1990, but he never stopped playing music. He continued to entertain old friends and win new ones with regular performances at the Waikiki Health Center, senior citizen gatherings and church groups, as well as sitting in with local jazz musicians and performing at festivals here and on the Mainland. He also maintained a long-standing newsletter for fans and friends that was a mixture of Hawai'i musical notes, gossip, jokes, liberal outrage, obituaries, bad puns and political commentary. "The most important thing was his ability to connect with humanity through his kindness, his humor and his music," Stanton said. Norris is survived by his wife, Lois; son, the Rev. John T. Norris of Honolulu; daughters, Kathleen and Rebecca of Honolulu and Charlotte of Kailua; and four grandchildren. Services are pending. [Adv 25/6/2002]
