Meredith Knox Gardner, an Army code-breaker whose work on encrypted KGB messages to and from Moscow during and after World War II led to the exposure of Soviet agents who spied on the U.S. atomic bomb project, has died at 89. He died Aug. 9, 2002 at a care center in Chevy Chase, Md. Gardner's work for the Army Signal Intelligence Service included the discovery of lists of code names in telegrams sent by the Soviet consulate in New York to Moscow from 1943 to 1945. This led directly to the unmaskings of Klaus Fuchs, the German-born scientist convicted of spying for the Soviets; Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, who in 1953 were executed for espionage; and British intelligence officer Kim Philby, who after defecting to Moscow in 1963 said he had been a Soviet spy for two decades. Within the intelligence community, Gardner was said to have been a living legend, and his work in penetrating Soviet codes is widely considered to have been one of the great U.S. counterintelligence coups of the last half-century. He remained unknown to the public for more than 50 years until 1996, when he emerged from anonymity to tell his story at a conference on the decrypting operation, code-named Venona. Gardner, a gifted linguist who was fluent in German, Old High German, Middle High German, Sanskrit, Latin, Greek, Lithuanian, Slavonic, Spanish, French, Italian, Russian and Japanese, came to Washington early in World War II to work as a civilian for the Army Signal Intelligence Service, a predecessor of the NSA. Before World War II, the native of Okolona, Miss. was a language teacher at the universities of Akron, Texas and Wisconsin. As senior Venona linguist, it was Gardner's job to recreate a Russian code book and translate Russian messages into English. He said in 1996 that he attributed his success to logic, his linguistic skills and "a sort of magpie attitude to facts, the habit of storing things away that did not seem to have any connection at all." Gardner retired in 1972. The Venona operation was shut down in 1980. [Adv 15/8/2002]

Rod Gardiner - Businessman Rod Gardiner, who at one time owned Hy's Steak House and Kobe Japanese Steak House restaurants in Hawai'i, died Sept. 27, 2002 in Arizona. He was 65. Gardiner was born in Canada and opened his first Hy's restaurant in Canada in the 1960s. In 1970, Gardiner and his wife, Marilyn, helped restaurant owner Hy Aisenstat open a restaurant in Honolulu. That same year, the Gardiners opened the first Kobe Steak House in Waikiki. In 1988, the Gardiners bought out their partners, who also owned Kobe restaurants in Lahaina, Maui and Palm Springs, Calif. The deal also included the Hy's restaurants in Waikiki and Century City, Calif. In addition to the Hy's and Kobe restaurants, Gardiner owned Bandito's Cantina in Pearlridge. Over the years, Gardiner divided his time between Arizona and Hawai'i, where he was active in community events. He helped raise money for several organizations, including The Nature Conservancy of Hawai'i, Honolulu Zoological Society, Variety Club School and the Waikiki Aquarium. In addition to his wife, Gardiner is survived by sons, Scott and Brett; one granddaughter; and mother, Rose. Services will be held on the Mainland. [Adv 01/10/2002]

Helen O. Gilbert-Bushnell - As an accomplished artist with seven children and a full-time career, Helen O. Gilbert-Bushnell possessed an uncommon energy, her husband, Kenneth W. Bushnell, said. "She would be up at 4 in the morning doing things, and she was just a reservoir of power. I don't know how she did it," he said. Through principally a painter, early in her career, Gilbert-Bushnell pioneered the use of polarized light in kinetic sculpture and moved into abstract work dealing with architectural planes. Her last few paintings were still lifes from nature, Bushnell said. Gilbert-Bushnell, 80, died of cancer Monday April 8, 2002 at her home. She graduated from Punahou School, received her bachelor's degree in art at Mills College in Oakland, Calif., and earned a master's degree in fine art at the University of Hawaii-Manoa, where she taught for 30 years. She also held appointments as visiting professor of art at Parson's School of Design and Pratt Institute in New York. Bushnell's paintings and prints have been exhibited nationally and internationally. Some of her work was exhibited with the American Abstract Artist Portfolio edition at the Museum of Modern Art, the Whitney Museum of American Art, the Solomon Guggenheim Museum, the Metropolitan Museum in New York, the Tate Gallery in London and the Stedelijk Museum in Amsterdam. Her work is also part of local collections at the Honolulu Academy of Arts, the Hawaii State Foundation on Culture and the Arts, the Contemporary Museum, the Persis Collection and others. Brother Edward L.K. Gomez dedicated his life to God, St. Louis School and the educational mission of the Marianist Order. "That was his calling," said James Burns, chief judge of the Intermediate Court of Appeals and president of the St. Louis Alumni Association. "He had a great rapport with the kids, a great love for the school and its religious mission." Gomez, 64, died Monday Jan 21, 2002 at the Marianist residence on the Kalaepohaku campus on Wai'ala'e Avenue that he so loved. "I never knew him to say no," said Burns, who graduated from St. Louis in 1955, a year ahead of Gomez. "He loved what he was doing, was suited for it and did it very well." Known simply as "Brother Ed," Gomez was honored in May 2001 as St. Louis Alumnus of the Year. His lifelong relationship with the school began in 1944, when he first stepped into a St. Louis School classroom as a first-grader. Gomez, who joined the Marianist Order at age 19, earned his college degree from St. Mary's College in California, majoring in French, and his master's degree in counseling from the University of San Francisco. He taught Spanish and French at St. Louis from 1961 to 1967 and served as the school's principal from 1982 to 1986. Gomez was also principal at Junipero High in California, St. Anthony's School on Maui and assistant provincial of the Marianist Province of the Pacific. The first Hawai'i-born Marianist to serve in the Rome-based headquarters of the Marianist Order, he spent five years at the Vatican overseeing the educational activities of 16 Marianist provinces in 31 countries on six continents. In recent years, Gomez has been the vice president of the Marianist Center, which serves as the landlord for St. Louis School and Chaminade University. Services are pending. The school announced yesterday that donations in the memory of "Brother Ed" can be made to the Gomez Family Scholarship Endowment Fund, set up by him and his father. Checks made payable to the endowment fund may be mailed to the St. Louis School Education Foundation at 3142 Wai'alaie Ave., Honolulu, HI 96816. [Adv 23/1/2002]

Robert Gompers lived for waves. "He was a real fish," movie producer Glen Beadles said about the professional surfer and his longtime friend. "He was an avid water person." And that's why Gompers moved in 1992 from Arizona to Maui, where he also worked as a bar manager at Casanova Italian Restaurant in Makawao. "Living in Hawaii ... has enabled me to live my dreams of riding big waves," Gompers wrote on his Web site (www.gomps.tv) earlier this year. The 34-year-old big-wave surfer had made surfing plans for the weekend, but he died Friday Jun 7, 2002 night on Maui's Honoapiilani Highway when his motorcycle drifted across the center line and collided with oncoming cars. Gomper's girlfriend, Allison Courter, 21, of Sacramento, Calif., who was his passenger, also died. Gompers, who grew up in Maryland and learned to surf there, took 11th place in this year's Tow-in World Cup on Maui and ninth place in 2001's tow-in competition. In tow-in surfing, two surfers work as a team. One surfer uses a motorized watercraft to transport the other into large waves that are not catchable by paddling. Gompers is survived by his mother and father, a brother and two sisters. Their names were not available. Funeral arrangements were pending, but his ashes were expected to be scattered at sea, said Ralph Sifford, Gomper's former tow-in surfing partner. [SB 13/6/2002]

Charlotte "Peaches" Guerrero, who with her husband Tony owned and operated three Tropics restaurants for about 40 years in Hawai'i, died Feb. 23 in her Honolulu home. Her niece, Tracy McCalla, said Guerrero was born Oct. 9, but would not say how old she was. "It was her own private little secret, so I'm keeping it that way," she said. Guerrero was working in the movie industry in Hollywood when she met her husband, who owned the Hawaiian Hut restaurant in the 1930s. They bought a restaurant called the Waffle Shop on Kalakaua Avenue, redecorated and renamed it the Tropics. In 1954, the couple opened their second restaurant, Tropics Ala Moana on Kona Street where the Ala Moana Hotel is today. They opened the Tropics-Lanai in Hilo in 1958. The Guerreros traveled the world, and Peaches once shot a 350-pound tiger while on safari. The animal was stuffed and put on display in the Ala Moana bar. She was the only woman member of the Mzuri Safari Club of San Francisco. "She had quite a life, she was a big game hunter in Africa," McCalla said. "She was quite an awesome little gal." In the Ala Moana restaurant's heyday, Hollywood stars and local business entrepreneurs were regular patrons. John Wayne, Bing Crosby, Jane Russell and Johnny Weismuller all stopped by. Henry Kaiser is said to have drawn up his plans for the Hawaiian Village on their tablecloths and Neal Blaisdell campaigned for office there. The Tropics was known for its prime rib, which was covered with 2 inches of rock salt and roasted for hours. Their martini, popular during women's lunches before shopping trips, was served in a 2-ounce glass decanter in a bowl full of crushed ice with a silver rim. In 1954, the couple took cooking classes at Le Cordon Bleu in Paris and added French dishes to their menus, but they did not prove popular. The couple scaled back to just the Ala Moana location, which closed in 1968 with the planned hotel taking over the property. The next day they opened the Tropics Salad Dressing manufacturing plant at Ala Moana Farmers Market. That business was sold in 1983. Tony died in 1985. A memorial service for Peaches will be held at 9 a.m. Friday at the Outrigger Canoe Club. In lieu of flowers, donations can be made to Hospice Hawai'i, the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association of Hawai'i or the Hawaiian Humane Society [Adv 26/2/2002]
