Robert LaMarchina could hear the music in his head. Every single note. It would flow through his mind with all the force and nuance of a symphony orchestra following every wave of his conductor's baton. From his youngest days as the son of a cellist, until Tuesday Sep 25, 2003 afternoon when LaMarchina died in his sleep in Honolulu, music was his life. LaMarchina, who led the Honolulu Symphony as conductor from 1967 to 1978, was 75. He had suffered from congestive heart failure. "He was a giant of a musician," said Beebe Freitas, associate artistic director for Hawai'i Opera Theatre and a pianist who performed with LaMarchina. "He was one of the greatest cellists I have ever known. As a soloist, he was absolutely compelling." She called him an "innate musician." "It was his alter ego," she said. "It was as natural to him as speaking." LaMarchina was born in New York City in 1928. He began studying the cello at age 7 and became a child prodigy, learning from masters at Curtis Institute in Philadelphia and in Paris before World War II. He was 8 when he made his first appearance, as a solo cellist with the St. Louis Symphony. At 15, he was hired by Arturo Toscanini to perform with the NBC Symphony Orchestra. LaMarchina went on to play with the Los Angeles Philharmonic and in Tokyo after he joined the Army in 1950. His first appearance as a conductor came in 1951 when he led the Fujiwara Opera company's production of "Madame Butterfly." He became musical director of the Honolulu Symphony in May 1967 amid much excitement. With his brooding good looks and style, he quickly became a favorite of symphony regulars. Marilynne LaMarchina, his wife for the past 23 years, said the cellist and conductor knew he had a gift. When he would prepare for a performance, "he went to another dimension," she said. "When he would study an opera or conduct something, he would put the score down and I wouldn't see or hear him for days," Marilynne LaMarchina said. "It was all in his head. He never played it on the piano or played a record." After he left the Honolulu Symphony, LaMarchina taught music at Indiana University, traveled internationally with the Ambassadors of Opera and conducted operas on the West Coast, she said. He also gave cello lessons up until his death. On Tuesday, LaMarchina woke up feeling ill and disoriented, his widow said. He rested much of the day. "I kept going in to check on him and he was sleeping and I thought that was good, he needed to rest," she said. About 5 p.m. she went to water their garden. "I picked him a big red rose because he loved those," she said. "I was going to fix him dinner but I went to check on him and he wasn't breathing." She called for paramedics, summoned a neighbor and gave him mouth-to-mouth. But it was too late. The music had stopped. Services are pending at Borthwick Mortuary. [Adv 02/10/2003]

Walter Lappert, 82, the ice cream magnate with an Ernest Hemingway look and a Kangol hat, died Monday Sep 1, 2003. Lappert arrived on Kaua'i in 1983 ostensibly to retire, but he set about building an ice cream empire instead, using what he said were old family recipes for super-rich ice creams with butterfat ratios of 16 percent to 18 percent. Later, he added sorbets made of fruit purée and cane syrup. Then he rolled out his line of Lappert's coffees. Some shops also sell shave ice and baked goods. He sold them initially out of his small factory along Kaumuali'i Highway in Hanapepe, then through Lappert-brand shops — dozens of them in Hawai'i, Arizona, California, Nevada, Oregon and Washington. There are also franchises in Japan. Lappert's white-bearded face is found on every container of his products, which according to one report generated $12 million a year. For more than a decade, many of the photos included Lappert in his white beard and cap, carrying a walking stick and accompanied by his black Labrador, Maxi, who died this summer. Former Mayor Maryanne Kusaka recalls going on visitor promotion trips with Lappert. "He contributed all the ice cream, and we were always very popular when he was along. Everyone recognized that profile," Kusaka said. Lappert was an international man. He spoke a half-dozen languages "and he loved to tell jokes in all those languages," said his companion of six years, Jacquelyn Ruskjer. He was born March 22, 1921, in the Austro-Hungarian empire and was raised partly in Prague, where he and his sister regularly visited an ice cream shop that served as the pattern for Lappert's ice cream. After World War II, he moved to South America, where he marketed liquors in Venezuela. He later ran a crepe shop in San Francisco and a fish-and-chips shop in Sausalito, Calif. Lappert's move to Kaua'i, which he first visited in 1972, was to be semi-retirement, but his flair for foods and promotion quickly took hold. He is survived by sons Michael of California, Patrick of Nebraska and Brendan of Michigan; daughter Julie Lucas; 13 grandchildren; a sister, Edith Cohen; former wives Eileen Lappert of California and Mary Pratt; and companion Jacquelyn Ruskjer. A private family memorial has been held; a public memorial is to be announced. [Adv 04/09/2003]

Thomas Kamaki "Jigs" Leslie - Comedian and musician Thomas Kamaki "Jigs" Leslie, a headliner at the old Queen's Surf Barefoot Bar who later worked for Tihati Productions, died Tuesday November 11, 2003. He was 75. Leslie was born on Moloka'i and had a flair for music and comedy at an early age. In 1950, he won a local talent contest and that sent him on the Lurline for a screen test in Hollywood. While there, Leslie was offered television and nightclub appearances, but he turned them down because he wanted to return home. Back in Hawai'i, Leslie served as master of ceremony at the old Niunalu Hotel and later became an entertainment director on the Leilani cruise liner, which traveled between Hawai'i and the West Coast. The 'ukulele-strumming comedian also worked with Sterling Mossman at the Barefoot Bar. In 1967, Leslie led a group of entertainers that performed at the Canada Expo. Leslie later would join Tihati Productions, where he headed Tihati's Kona Beach Luau at the Hotel King Kamehameha. He worked for Tihati for 19 years. Cha Thompson, who runs Tihati with her husband, Jack, said Leslie was "one of a kind." "He was really a comic, funny," Thompson said. "He even told me what to say for his eulogy. He said, 'Be sure to tell them that I was handsome and that I could sing good.'" Thompson said Leslie will be sorely missed. "He really was one of a kind because he lived so rascal, but everybody loved being with him," she said. "When he got on stage, you had a good time." Leslie is survived by his wife, Nimfa; daughter, Chahati; and son, Kamaki. Services will be from 9 to 10 a.m. Tuesday at Island Family Christian Church, 3375 Salt Lake Blvd. His ashes will be scattered later that day in Kona. [Adv 14/11/2003]
